HISTORICAL SNAPSHOT

Sponsored by the Archives of the History of American Psychology

Psychologist Ruth Cruikshank Bussey, 1911–2007 (in black), poses with other members of the Air Service Command (ASC) testing unit in Mobile, Alabama in 1943. Bussey, who had received her PhD from Brown University in 1937, worked with the ASC during the Second World War, developing and validating tests for civilian aircraft employees. During the War, Bussey also enlisted with the Women Accepted for Volunteer Emergency Service (WAVES), a division of the Navy consisting only of women.

— Cathy Faye, AHAP, Assistant Director

Photo Credit: Archives of the History of American Psychology—University of Akron—Ruth Cruikshank Bussey Papers

DOI: 10.1037/a0020320e