Note: "Recognition change" does not include recognition of entities constructed by international or regional bodies to serve as temporary or transitional governments (e.g. TFG in Somalia), nor does it include cases where individuals made claims but failed to win any bilateral international recognition (e.g. Taylor in Liberia, Ali Mahdi in Somalia).

* Bilateral recognition extended temporarily by one state (Libya). As discussed in the case study, there was no serious effort to lobby other states to provide recognition, to cut ties with the incumbent government, or to have recognition extended at a multi-lateral level. Not coded as a case of recognition.

 Bilateral recognition provided by a small number of ally states. Most states maintained recognition of the government-in-exile. No recognition at the multilateral level.
