SHOW IF P_ASSIGN1 = 2: More than 50,000 troops from the National Guard and active duty military have recently participated in the domestic response to the coronavirus outbreak. Overall, the military's involvement did not produce any discernible effect on the death rate from the virus and many people believe the military response has been a great failure.

SHOW IF P_ASSIGN1 = 3: More than 50,000 troops from the National Guard and active duty military have recently participated in the domestic response to the coronavirus outbreak. Overall, the military's involvement helped produce far fewer deaths than there might otherwise have been and many people believe the military response has been a great success.

SHOW IF P_ASSIGN1 = 4: In the face of widespread protests, political authorities recently mobilized the National Guard and put other active duty military units on alert to be ready to intervene. Overall, the military's involvement seemed to help tamp down violence and restore order, reminding the public that the use of the troops in domestic conflict has always been an important and traditional military mission.

SHOW IF P_ASSIGN1 = 5: In the face of widespread protests, political authorities recently mobilized the National Guard and put other active duty military units on alert to be ready to intervene. Overall, the military's involvement seemed to do little to tamp down violence and restore order while inflaming tensions, reminding the public why the use of the troops in domestic conflict has always been controversial.

SHOW IF P_ASSIGN1 = 6: Did you know that according to a recent study, a growing number of active duty service members have begun to openly post their support for Republican candidates for political office on their social media accounts? Additionally, a large number of retired generals and admirals have openly endorsed the Republican presidential candidates in every presidential election since 2004. Thank you for participating in this study. The true purpose of this study was to learn about what the public thinks about the U.S. military beyond a simple expression of confidence. To explore whether public perceptions of military partisan activity might affect public attitudes, we designed a question in which some respondents were told that the military and veteran community had a majority of Republicans and others were told that the military and veteran community had a majority of Democrats. In fact, most surveys confirm that the military and veteran community have a majority of Republicans. Similarly, we also designed a question in which some respondents were told that most members of the military supported either President Donald Trump or former Vice-President Joe Biden; in fact, the polling about military vote preferences in the current election season has been very limited and we do not know of any that show a clear majority for one or the other. If you received the version of the questions with the incorrect ("military/veterans are Democrat" or "most military support Trump/Biden") information, we regret that the survey design required that you hear misleading information to the contrary. Finally, we included a question in which some respondents were told that the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and other senior leaders supported or opposed the use of military force against Iran and a question in which some respondents were told the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs and other senior military leaders supported or opposed restrictions on transgender persons in the U.S. military. If you received a version of either question indicating support or opposition by senior military leaders, we regret that the survey design required that you hear misleading information. The current Chairman of the Joint Chiefs and other senior leaders have not publicly expressed support or opposition for hypothetical strikes against Iran or for or against restrictions on transgender persons, though they have implemented the latter policy.
