Codebook for the Israel Polarization Panel Dataset, 2019–2021

Noam Gidron, Lior Sheffer, and Guy Mor

Introduction

This codebook accompanies the Israel Polarization Panel Dataset, a ten-wave survey panel study conducted before, during, and after the four elections held in Israel in 2019-2021 (April 2019, September 2019, March 2020, March 2021). Participants were voting-age Jewish Israelis who were recruited by Midgam Panel and were re-interviewed for each panel wave.

Notes and conventions

Metadata variables are received from the polling firm and are constant for every respondent through the panel. Time specific variables are prefixed by w[x]_ where x is the wave number (1-9). Some variables are measured with respect to several groups or parties. These variables are suffixed by _[group]. For example, variable w3_thermometer_Likud records feeling thermometer evaluations towards the Likud party, captured in the 3th wave.

Wave 8 experimental component

Wave 8 included a 2x3 experimental component on perceptions of the radical right party "HaTzionut HaDatit". Respondents were shown a single text out of 6 possible experimental groups.

All respondents were shown the following introductory passage:

The recent formation of the new radical right candidate list "HaTziyonut HaDatit" ("Religious Zionism") in preparation for the upcoming elections, had sparked a public debate. The list consists of three parties – "HaIhud HaLeumi-Tkuma" led by Bezalel Smotrich, "Otzma Yehudit" led by Itamar Ben Gvir, and "Noam" led by Avi Maoz. The roots of "Otzma Yehudit" could be traced to Rabbi Meir Kahane's movement "Kach", which was disqualified from running for parliament due to its Incitement of racism. The principles advocated by "Noam" focus on an objection to equal rights for women and LGBTQs.

And either of the following two passages regarding the party's electoral viability:

a. The list passes the electoral threshold

In a recently published Channel 13 News election poll, the "HaTziyonot HaDatit" list passes the electoral threshold and gets five seats in parliament.

b. The list does not pass the electoral threshold

In a recently published Channel 13 News election poll, the "HaTziyonot HaDatit" list does not pass the electoral threshold.

As well as either of three passages regarding the narrative of mainstream right-wing Party "Likud" regarding the list:

a. Endorsement

Some top "Likud" officials have expressed support for the formation of the joint list, for Ben Gvir to join the parliament, or for incorporating Ben Gvir and his party in the coalition that would be formed after the elections. Minister of transport Miri Regev said that "Ben Gvir is part of the religious Zionism, which is part of the coalition. I am pleased that Smotrich and Ben Gvir united, so as not to lose right-wing votes". Chairman of the Coalition Miki Zohar expressed a similar notion, claiming that "Ben Gvir is part of the religious Zionism, which would be a part of the coalition". According to Zohar, uniting these parties in one list "is very important for the right wing, and would help us win the elections."

b. Denouncement

Some top "Likud" officials have criticized ideas of including Ben Gvir and his party in the government or coalition that would be formed after the elections. Minister of transport Miri Regev said that she "does not think we will seat in a coalition with Ben Gvir." Speaker of the Knesset Yariv Levin explained that Ben Gvir and his party "have no intention, and neither do we, for them to be part of the coalition, because the differences between us are grave" and that "Itamar Ben Gvir's ways are not my ways, and his opinions are not my opinions."

c. Contradiction

Different top "Likud" officials have expressed different thoughts regarding the appropriate place for Ben Gvir and his party in Israeli politics. Chairman of the Coalition Miki Zohar expressed support for including Ben Gvir and his party in the coalition that would be formed after the elections. Zohar claimed that "Ben Gvir is part of the religious Zionism, which would be a part of the coalition" and added that uniting these parties in one list "is very important for the right wing, and would help us win the elections." On the other hand, Speaker of the Knesset Yariv Levin expressed opposition to including the party in a future coalition. Levin explained that Ben Gvir and his party "have no intention, and neither do we, for them to be part of the coalition, because the differences between us are grave" and that "Itamar Ben Gvir's ways are not my ways, and his opinions are not my opinions."

Variables rr_threshold and rr_rhetoric capture the treatment group assigned to respondents. Outcome variables for this experimental component are described next.
