Methodology of the Opinion Poll

 Sample size: 1159 persons, aged over 18.
 Stratified, probabilistic, multi-staged sample.
 Stratification criteria: 18 geographical areas following the historical provinces, residential areas and the size of urban localities(four categories determined according to the population number).
 152 sampling places in 90 localities (36 towns and 54 rural localities out of which 36 master-villages) belonging to 36 districts and Bucharest.
 Selection of localities, polling stations and respondents was done by probabilistic means. Electoral lists have been used in order to select the respondents.
 National representativity for the adult population; error margin of +/- 2.9 % for values of 50 %; +/- 2,5 % for values of 25 % and 75 %; +/- 1,8 % for values of 10 % and 9 %, at probability of 0,95 .
 The sample was controlled using the 1992 Census data.
 The values shown in tables and graphs are those resulting directly from the field survey (no weighs were made).

 The interviews have been held at the respondents` homes.
 The list of political parties and political personalities has been drawn up by the Jury (the parties and leaders of parties with representatives in both Houses of the Parliament).
 Mass-media audience refers to " the day preceding " and to " the 7 days preceding " the interview.
 Because 1996 is an electoral year, the questionnaire has been modified a little. We want to point out that the results of public opinion pools do not represent predictions for elections. Those interested in such predictions are bound to consider the high percentage of those who did not express their voting option (30 %), as well as the relatively low trust in political parties (which is even lower than the voting option).
 Field survey during: March 22 - 28 , 1996.
