Table 2: Descriptive Statistics of Covariates (Part 2)

1 Comparison with the Family Income and Expenditure Survey

Table 3 shows a comparison with the Family Income and Expenditure Survey (FIES) to show that the randomization was successful. In both localities, the average monthly income was slightly lower in my sample than the 2023 FIES. This makes sense as Moros are expected to be poorer than the Christian local population.

	This Study	FIES
Maguindanao	10,618	13,401
Cotabato City	19,201	19,292

2 The Corretates of Clan Affiliation

Here, I report a result from a linear regression examining the correlates of self-reported clan affiliation. I employ a linear probability model for interpretative simplicity (all coeffficients are interpreted as changes in probability of being affiliated with a clan.). Online Appendix provides the largely consistent results from a logistic regression, which captures the binary nature of the dependent variable more correctly.

Figure 10 shows the result. Older and richer Maguindanaoans indicate higher likelihood of expressing affiliation with clans. On the other hand, some jobs are negatively associated with clans. Farmers, homemakers (most likely housewives), and workers are mush less likely to be affiliated with clans.

3 Ethnicity and BTA Evalution

As seen in Figure 11, the Maguindanaoans express much higher level of satisfaction with the BTA. Not only the mean is higher, but the mode of the distribution is quite high among Maguindanaoans compared to teh other Muslim ethnic groups.

4 BTA Evalution by Policy Area

The correlates of support for peace can vary depending on the specific issues related to the peace process. As stated in the main body of this article, the significant factors generally overlap. However, there are some notable differences. This section provides the exact results for each subfield of the BTA performance and peace policies.

The results with respect to the satisfaction with the stabilization and economic recovery are similar to the general results.

For the function of the BTA to elicit popular participation in the new system of governance, male respondents give significantly lower points. The participation of women's civil society organizations is an outstanding feature in the Mindanao peace process (???). This may have caused some sense of alienation in the male citizens in Maguindanao.

The BTA performance related to anti-corruption is not appreciated by those who are affiliated with clans and who have witnessed clan feuds. Given that the clan-related variables are not associated with other evaluation measures, members of political clans perceive the BTA specifically as corrupt.

The BTA extension is less supported by Cotabato City residents. This significantly deviates from other evaluations as Cotabato City residents give higher evaluation for them.
