2. Q.2 (of 13): I can tell when access to an online resource is provided through a library and when access is open to the public.

#	Answer	Bar	Response	%
1	True. For example, when using Google Scholar, which is open to the public, I know that the results list may include a mix of resources that are open to the public (e.g., Congressional Budget Office reports) as well as resources that are available to me only through a library subscription (e.g., JSTOR). I am able to identify which resources are supplied by a library.		2,486	72%
2	False. For example, I may notice differences in online resources (e.g., some prompt for passwords), but I don't draw any conclusions from those differences.		970	28%

23. Q.10a (of 13): We'd like to know why you selected "It depends" in the prior question. (Please check all that apply.)

#	Answer	Bar	Response	%
1	Some materials are easier to use in print than online and vice versa; regardless of format, I pick whichever resource is easiest to use to complete the research task at hand.		980	89%
2	If I'm studying in the library, it's more likely that I'll reach for a book, whereas if I'm home, I'll go online instead.		286	26%
3	For purposes of cite-checking, I prefer to go online and get a PDF of the official source, but if PDF is not available, then I will seek a copy from a print source.		365	33%
4	I use the resource in the format recommended by my faculty/employer.		96	9%
5	Other reason; please specify:		144	13%
