Most Representative Hypothesis
The level of explicit acknowledgment and discussion of the transgender identity of the delivery worker.
The collective decision-making process reflects a stronger emphasis on social equity and support for marginalized individuals.
The preference for hiring delivery workers is influenced by perceived gender identity and experience.
The preference for delivery options is driven more by the quantity and relevance of items offered than by the characteristics of the delivery workers.
The level of engagement and discussion depth among participants.
The clarity of criteria for decision-making.
Clarity of preference for one option over another.
The level of consensus among participants regarding their choices.
The level of experience of the delivery workers is a significant factor.
The emphasis on language proficiency as a deciding factor for preference.
The level of specific positive feedback about delivery performance.
***
***
**
**
*
**
Discussion type
Choice doesn't include trans
Choice includes trans
-0.1
0.0
0.1
0.2
Association between discussion rating (Z) on P(choose trans in post-discussion outcome round)