Any additional comments about trust in your group?
No
I loved the Wheaton Passage that was offered.
I trust them as individuals but maybe not so much as leaders themselves? But collectively I think we help balance each other out.
We were able to discuss many of our beliefs and emotions completely and honestly, it was a very safe place.
The girls who were in my cabin at Passage are still my closest friends on campus and already some of the closest friends I have.
There are certain members of my group that I trust more than others
During Pre-O i felt like i trusted my group but as soon as we got back I felt alienated by everybody for seemingly no reason and now dislike engaging with this group as i feel like there is almost a clique i’m not a part of Keep in mind I am a 21 y/o transfer student in a group of 17-19 y/o freshmen, so my level of trust hinges heavily on the fact that there is that age gap. Certain members of my group I trust very very much, but the majority I would say less-so.
Loved my squad to death
I like to think I can be open around my land sea group.

I felt very lucky that my group got along exceptionally well. We became an adventure family and, though we are not the closest of friends here on campus, we will always have a special bond.
I had one very good friend in the group whom I could trust, but the other people weren't much more than surface level friends, and many of them did not have as much of an understanding of hiking/camping/backpacking as I did, which made it more difficult for me to trust their judgement.
None

There were some individuals I connected with more, so while I didn't have complete trust in the group as a whole I did trust specific people
