Our dataset comprises the archived record of the UK Prime Ministers' correspondence about the security situation in Northern Ireland between 1969 and 1973, retrieved from The National Archives (UK) (1969-73). The files contain security reports, internal memos, letters and telegrams, meeting transcripts and summaries, proposed policies, notes about proposed or initiated policies, hand-written edits to public statements, and public documents (including news stories) circulated for internal discussion. Material includes documents designated as top-secret, classified, and confidential. This archive collection includes more than 8,000 pages of government correspondence as internment was considered, initiated, and amended. It represents virtually the universe of internal, security-related material submitted to or authored by Prime Ministers Harold Wilson or Edward Heath during this period.

We collected the archive material as individual photographs from the British National Archives at Kew in September 2015. One file (PREM15/478) was unavailable at the time of data retrieval; librarians subsequently provided us with digitized copies of this file. No documents from the selected Correspondence Files (Table 1) were omitted. We used Optical Character Recognition (OCR) software to digitize the documents and paid to manually validate the digitization's accuracy.

Included files came from the Prime Minister's Office records (PREM), Records of the Ministry of Defense (DEFE), and records created or inherited by the Northern Ireland office (CJ). They all are housed at The National Archives (UK). Record opening date: January 2002. Photographed and numbered in September 2015 by [AUTHOR REDACTED]. Each file's unique URL is hyperlinked in the following table's "File" column.

Detailed information about data and analysis are also available at [REPOSITORY DEDACTED].
