All politicians have the incentive to act what's best for themselves and their party
user1

During campaign, if it's beneficial to promise things to the constituents so the politician is elected, they will do so
user1

Republicans are more hypocritical in my opinion. They have been recorded saying one thing and then doing another. Sometimes they have been saying it for years and then switch when it suits them.
user2

But once they're elected, there's more aspects at play and it may no longer be beneficial to fulfill that promise
user1

Both republicans and democrats are hypocritical
user1

Both parties engage in hypocrisy, but one is worse than the other.
user2

It's not just because of the individual's personality, it is hard to deliver a promise when there are many stakeholders that need to make a decision
user1

Republicans are more audacious in their hypocrisy and engage in it more often.
user2

All politicians are the same. They do what is best at the moment, making sure that it's beneficial for them and their party
user1

As long as they keep being in power
user1

Republicans once claimed to be the moral majority and are now willing to do and say anything to stay in power.
user2

That is also the case with Democrats. I'm sure they are willing to do anything to stay in power. What good is being a politician if you are not in power
user1

They go back on their on words from as little as four years ago, doing a complete 180.
user2

Yes, Democrats also, but not to the same degree.
user2

You're entitled to your own opinion
user1

I strongly believe that all politicians are hypocritical. They do what is best for them and their party at the moment
user1

Staying in power shouldn't supercede keeping the country a Democracy.
user2

Politics and hypocrisy go hand in hand it seems.
user2