Hi. I think Republicans are more hypocritical because they focus on freedom/liberty/constitutional rights in their rhetoric but frequently do what is best for a small group of people while taking away rights.
user1

Democrats can be hypocritical, of course, but the Republican Party is entirely built on lies and bad-faith arguments.
user1

I think that Republicans are the most hypocritical. Many Republican politicians will say that they are in support of particular thing and then will not vote to support that very thing they said they approve of.
user2

Yeah, the Republican Party has devolved into lies and bad-faith arguments for decades now.
user1

Republicans will say that they are upset and saddened over the recent gun violence, but they will not vote for bills to put restrictions on gun purchasing.
user2

Yes, gun control/rights is a very clear through-line on this issue. Democrats, on the other hand, have advocated for gun control, reproductive rights, etc. in national platforms going back decades.
user1

Also, Republicans banged on about deficits and then blew up deficits under Bush and Trump.
user1

Yes, Republicans are only concerned with spending when they are not in charge of how the money is being spent.
user2

They recognized the hollowness of their policy stances by not having much of a party platform in 2020 aside from electing Trump. They are counting on the inevitable midterm slump for incumbents + global economic issues but lack any actual solutions.
user1

Republicans want to preserve the lives of the unborn but do not support measures to take care of people who are already born and need help with the necessities of life.
user2

What is disappointing is that we've sort of seen Democrats holding as much power as they can under Obama but the Tea Party emergence + racism + needing moderate Dems to win the House and Senate meant we couldn't enshrine solutions to ongoing problems.
user1

Yes, Republicans have no stance. They just say that they are pro Trump and anti Democrats. They have no plans to make any sort of change.
user2

Correct; when they tried to repeal ACA, they put out a bunch of half-solutions and even no solution to healthcare costs that thankfully were defeated.
user1