Hi
user1

How are you doing today?
user1

Hi Definitely Republicans. They want to ban abortions but don't want to make significant changes to gun legislation that are killing thousands of people each year.
user2

Absolutely agreed.
user1

Sorry I did not answer your question--I am fine.
user2

They want to ban abortions, but are perfectly fine with capital punishment.
user1

I understand there's a difference between the two, but all of their going on about the sanctity of life is sickening.
user1

They are not Pro-life--only Pro birth
user2

That's a good way of putting it.
user1

I also find it incredibly hypocritical how they claim to be so religious, but failed to live by the most basic standards of decency and compassion.
user1

They also do not care about people to try to help them in their lives.--unless it benefits their constuients directly so that they insure that they will vote for them. They do not take care of basic needs. Only offer thoughts and prayers
user2

And also, wrapping themselves in the flag and going on about how they love America, all while violating the bedrock principles that the country was built on.
user1

Yes, thoughts and prayers.
user1

Too bad you can't feed a family with thoughts and prayers.
user1

The Republicans are all about "freedom", as long as it's their freedom. Minorities don't need freedom apparently.
user1

Not that the Democrats don't have some hypocritical tendencies also, but the Republicans are far far worse.
user1

Exactly or bring back their loved ones. Mitch McConnell single handedly turned over the Supreme Court to the Republicans. First byt blocking Merrick Garland when there was plently of time for him to be nominated and then by rushing through Amy COmey Barrett. YOu are right --only Republicans can pursue life, liberty and happiness according to them
user2

Remember Lindsey Graham going on about how a president shouldn't appoint Supreme Court justices with less than a year left in their term. That only applied when a Democrat was president. He even said at the time that people should use it against him if he changed his position. Shameless
user1

The problem is that there are absolutely no repercussions. They flat out lie and then get reelected.
