I actually think both are hypocrits but democrats are more of it.
user1

Right now I think the Republicans are more hypocritical.
user2

I thinking is democrats are more hypocritic because the change in stance is always fluctuating on many major issues. .
user1

I say this because they seem to have no introspection. When a democrat senator or rep gets accused of miscounduct, we pretty much band against our own regarding inappropriate behavior.
user2

Give an example of one of those minor issues.
user2

I am trying to think of one, but on big items I think we have been fairly consistent. I've been behind Build Back Better from the beginning
user2

cost for education. They will preach about putting money in schools but then lower the funding to allocate it to school systems that dont need it based on test scores.
user1

but the children who need it may reside in lower income areas but dont get the same access to resources at those in upper income neighborhoods
user1

I guess I am not familiar with lowering funding based on high test scores. I will research that when we finish here. However, as a former teacher I can tell you that schools with lower scores need more help.
user2

I agree
user1

Right now, I think the republicans are sticklers for accuracy when reporting on Democrats, while accepting a lot of misinformation and outright lies from their own party.
user2

Neither party is prefect, but I am confirming far more lies from the Republicans than from the Democrats.
user2

that is true as well. I just feel republicans will stand behind a belief regardless if right or wrong without change in stance.
user1

guns for examples
user1

Oh I totally agree with you on the gun subject
user2

But they are ignoring facts to stand behind that stance.
user2