While both sides can be quite hypocritical, I can't get past Republican hyperbole about nearly everything.
user1

I think Republicans are more hypocritical. They claim to be "Christian" and "pro-life" yet they support gun violence, the death penalty and much more.
user2

A child born is not a child cared for.
user2

Very true, Beth. That's my issue. Pro-life until people get here and then they simply don't care.
user1

Just like all the flag waving and faux patroitism. Once those military folks are injured, mentally scarred, etc., they don't care.
user1

I am also very concerned about the level of hate in many arenas that has become acceptable since Trump was president. The civil rights movement has lost a lot of ground in this present climate
user2

For a dormer president to speak at an NRA conference days after them ass killing of young children by an eighteen year old who easily secured assault weapons is unforgiveable - and then he danced!
user2

former
user2

Yes, it's become acceptable to be cruel and racist/bigoted in public in a way that we haven't seen in years.
user1

He really makes the country look awful. What an awful human being. It's all a show and game to the guy. It's well documented that he doesn't have any real views rather did and said whatever to get power.
user1

I can't believe that people keep following him and clones like Ron DeSantis.
user1

I am appalled about so much - I am shocked that Mitch McConnell directed the Texas senator to seek some common ground on common sense gun regulation. I am very skeptical if he will support it when push comes to shove.
user2

There are also many social justice issues to be worked on - care for the elderly(social security), health care and the horrible situation at the border.
user2

We say we don't want the immigrant here but our government contributed to the appalling situations in many central American countries.
user2

I'm surprised by McConnell's actions too. There always seems to be some sort of motive behind any move of his, so it's hard to believe anything.
user1

I have voted for Republicans in the past - I still consider it important to look at each individual and their positions but I am extremely concerned about the polarization of the parties today
user2