Hello
user1

Hello there!
user2

How are you doing today? Oh boy, this is a heavy topic huh?
user2

I'm great, and you're right about that. How about you?
user1

I'm alright. I've recently moved into a very Republican area that is heavily filled with churches and pro-life rallies are happening this summer here. It's scary.
user2

I particularly find that the hypocrisy pops up a lot when it comes to wanting to protect unborn children versus what is to be done to protect children in schools with Republicans. You?
user2

In light of the recent mass shootings that is.
user2

It's extremely hypocritical! I do not consider them "pro-life" at all. If they cared about children the way they do fetuses then those children would've been protected.
user1

I don't understand how they can defend such a violent and horrific weapon. It is hard to fathom.
user1

I agree. I saw a Facebook event advertising a pro life rally and they were encouraging those with open carry gun permits to BRING THEM AS A SIGN OF SUPPORT.
user2

I was dumbfounded.
user2

How does that even make sense?
user2

Yeah, they can't. All that can be done is make it harder to obtain those weapons but Republians don't want to make it more difficult to get them.
user2

Guns and pro-life just don't go hand-in-hand for me. Especially when it comes to innocent children being slain. But God forbid a woman make a choice to terminate something that is not a baby yet for the sake of her health or well-being.
user1

Something has got to give. Gun control needs to happen. That's why I'm glad my local elections are coming up.
user1

Same here. I'm glad that knowing that I can at least negate one Republican vote by being in a Red state. Help fight the hypocrisy.
user2