Honestly, I think Democrats are more hypocritical. Republicans are awful, but at least they're usually pretty up-front about how awful they are and stick by their ideologies. Democrats often say one thing and then waffle when it comes down to it.
user1

There's no question that Republicans are more hypocritical. Many Republicans who were in the primaries for the 2020 election initially denounced Trump - and then later on kissed his ass.
user2

Any retort to that?
user2

That's very true, I have to agree with you on that. Most of my irritation with hypocritical Democrats comes from a lot of politicians using their platforms to promise that they'll work hard to get certain things passed but then when it comes down to it, they don't fight for it and end up giving in or shrugging it off as something they can't do anything about.
user1

I'll concede that ALL politicians make promises they don't keep. I'm disappointed in Biden - but still, he's a much better alternative than another 4 years of Trump.
user2

Oh, 100%. I'm not a huge fan of Biden but I'd take him for another 20 years over any more Trump. I think my emotions are high right now, too, because of the Texas shooting. I feel that Democrats have been talking about doing something about gun control for such a long time now, and after events like this, they come out full-force saying something needs to be done, but then nothing comes of it. I know part of it is Republicans blocking them, but I still feel they aren't fighting as hard as they could be.
user1

It looks like they may at least enforce a background check with bipartisan support - one can only hope.
user2

I definitely hope. I'm not sure how much more of this the US can take without just crumpling.
user1