I definitely think that Republicans are more hypocritical.
user1

This one is tough. I agree that Republicans are more hypocritical.
user2

all of them say one thing to their constitutents and then go back to washington and do the opposite or do nothing
user1

I think that Republicans are more hypocritical because a lot of their beliefs and motives are religion based. Not always a bad thing, but in recent cases their proposals in law don't follow the actual goals they say.
user2

all R epublicans think about is money and their bottom line in their political coffers-they have dollar signs for eyeballs
user1

I definitely think that Republicans have a self-first nature and their motives and justifications show that very clearly
user2

And money and wealth is a huge part of that
user2

definitely agree that they are all in for themselves and holding on to their jobs.
user1

Do you think Democrats are hypocritical at all?
user2

I think selfishness vs selflessness is where the two parties contradict each other. Liberal vs conservative aside, one is more "for all" and one is "for me"
user2

some might be , but I think that the majority of Democrats are just plain folks like their constituents and they think like them with what is best for all people
user1

i agree!
user2

agreed about your definitions for liberal and conservative
user1

i don't think that ALL republicans are hypocritical, but most of those in office are imo
user2

I think that there might be a handful of Eepublicans who are good people, but the majority are suspect-money is all they think about
user1

but in full of the question, i do think republicans are far more hypercritical than democrats. due to their selfish nature, goals and ideals contradicting their laws, and general self loathing that usually occurs in media.
user2

money is definitely all they think about
user2

yep, selfishness is at the root of all of their thinking-BUT the party was not always lke this.
user1

great talk, thanks!
user2