Neither are more hypocritical than the other.
user1

While I think both 'sides' can be hypocritical at times, I lean more towards Republicans being more hypocritical
user2

It depends on the subject matter.
user1

I think we can look at the most recent school shooting in Texas as an example.
user2

Example of what?
user1

Republicans will vote to protect children before they are even born, at the expense of others, however they will not do anything aout gun control, which would protect our children.
user2

Protecting children seems to only matter to republicans when it suites them best
user2

You may have a point there.
user1

I am not saying Democrats are not hypocritical as well, just perhaps that Republicans tend to me more so
user2

How do you detect who is going to shoot up a place?
user1

You cant, but you can make better laws that prohibit 18 year olds from buying automatic assault rifles
user2

and have better mental health checks in place before people are allowed to purchase guns
user2

So this same guy will do the same thing but at an older age.
user1

Well honestly, I am saying NOBODY should be allowed to buy those types of guns
user2

How about no assault weapons allowed anywhere?
user1

Those should be strictly for military
user2

exactly!
user2

Do you have any examples of democrats or republicans being hypocrtical?
user2

Not that I can think of right now; just both sides not agreeing.
user1

True. I have seen in Congress both parties voting AGAINST something that would benefit the people and they believe in, simply to mess with the other party
user2

it makes me sad
user2

I wish we could get make to bipartisanship for the sake of our nation.
user2

Sometimes it seems they disagree just because they are in different parties.
user1

Yeah, it's not right
user2

Let's do away with the two or three party system.
user1

I agree, I think its time for that
user2
