I think it is important to note that I think both parties are hypocritical. However, I think the Republican party is definitely more hypocritical.

What do you think?
user1

I find them both to be hypocritical to a certain point. They both are influenced by lobbyist that lead them to compromise on their principles in order to fund their elections. I do tend to agree that Republicans are more hypocritical.
user2

What is something that you think they are the most hypocritical about?
user2

Republicans or Democrats.
user2

I agree with you. I think Republicans are most hypocritical especially when it comes to how they represent their constituents.
user1

I think many of the viewpoints that mainstream republican politicans support do not actually reflect the views of most Americans.
user1

Birth control, taxes, assault weapons, etc.
user1

What about you?
user1

I am amazed at how Republicans can totally change the views and still get support within their party. I think it is a little harder for Democrats to do that. I totally agree with you about not representing their constituents. But people vote party lines and will let them get away with it the next time they are up for election.
user2

Democrats have a big problem of not taking a strong stand on issues. I think it hurts them a lot.
user2

Yes I agree, democrats will be harder on their politicans if they act immorally. Al Franken for example
user1

do you think it is possible for there to be a political party which is not hypocritical at all?
user1

In our current political system in America
user1

I think the larger voter turnout is, the harder it will be for any political party to be hypocritical.
user1

I doubt it. Elections are expensive and they need money. It also takes a certain type of person to run for office and they are usually someone with a bit of an ego and superiority complex. They tend to think they know more so we should listen to them even if we don't agree. I'm afraid it is just the way things are. I would hope the increase in voting would help, but I'm not sure with redistricting and voter suppresion.
