I think Republicans are more hypocritical.
user1

I feel as though both political parties, in varying ways, have hypocritical behaviors. The reasons are very different. In the case of Republicans I believe it is intentional and done with cruelty. With Democrats I believe it is plain disorganization and thinking through who is saying what as so much flies around.
user2

Can you elaborate as to your perception of Republicans being more hypocritical?
user2

Being hypocritical takes little thinking, most of the time. To this end, the fact Republicans do it consistently is what makes me think it is intentional. I feel as if Democrats have been handed a horrible pile of things from the Trump years and just can not get on top of the messaging, even though they want to.
user2

The reason I believe the Republicans are more hypocritical is because I feel like the majority of Republicans are Christian. They believe in Christianity and the bible. The bible teaches about helping people and helping those less fortunate, yet Republicans do not seem to support policies that help those less fortunate, such as universal healthcare, immigration, and those who need social programs.
user1

I do agree that the democrats are a bit less organized so therefore there can by hypocritical behavior. I also agree with Republicans it is done with cruelty.
user1

I appreciate what you are saying although this then denies the Jewish Republicans (very involved during the Trump years....), LGBTQ Republicans, etc. Although much smaller groups, they tend to also not follow the normal rigors of their religion. Not sure if it is entirely religion or people hiding behind religion to be devious.
user2

Yes, there are definitely other republicans besides Christian republicans. Another recent event that shows hypocritical behavior is the gun control issue. Many politicians do not think guns are a problem. They think it is a mental health issue. Yet, they do not support mental health policies. They do not introduce legislation to help mental illness.
user1

What I find insulting to my intelligence is the use of religion (in any form) as an arbiter or how things ought to be done and then complain about other groups who also use religion to justify their causes (Sharia law, female genital mutilation, anti-LGBTQ, etc.). I wish people would simply talk with me about their inside feelings about right/wrong (morality) instead of what some literary stories from years past have to do with anything.
user2

I 100% agree. I do not think any religion has any place in politics.
user1

You NAILED IT! The whole mental health issue is a direct result of populations being denied appropriate and reasonable health care, denial of racism, denial of LGBTQ.
user2

I think they are also scared and therefore they support policies and behavior so as not to deal with change that makes them afraid.
user1