How's it going?
user1

Great how are you
user2

So far so good. So what are your thoughts about the question?
user1

I would say that Republicans are huge hypocrites.
user2

how about you
user2

I personally think both parties are pretty hypocritical but the Republican party is more guilty of this. Take abortion for example. They want to remove the rights of a woman to do with her body as she pleases, and when these children are born they are born unwanted, uncared for, with no guarantee of healthcare, etc etc.
user1

Exactly. Their view point is, "let's take away a women's reproductive rights, but my goodness, we can't possibly take away our gun rights" it's rather sickening.
user2

Democrats think that a diploma is the answer to everything. They have no idea just how much society isn't in that place and the availabilty and accessibility of education just isn't there for everyone.
user1

yea, and any idea of making college accessible to everyone will never get passed
user2

Right? In 1776 most people owned a gun to hunt for food because there was no store. There was no police force. Such different times. Nobody needs an AR15 or AK47. We have the data to show that gun control works.
user1

Every other country isn't having the same problems we are experiencing, but these old men are getting too much money from the NRA to ever have a gun lobby be passed
user2

If republicans want a right to life for an unborn child they have to provide a way to have a quality life for the actual living too. The problem is money wins. They say whatever they want to get the money and buy the power. They do not cooperate and are bad faith negotiators. It's all about the power. Not the people.
user1

Politician is not a service. It's a job. Republicans (and democrats) aren't looking to fire themselves.
user1

This is why there needs to be a change. No more big bucks from NRA ... it's payoffs and nothing will change
user2

They are hypocrites, plan and simple
user2

Tighter voting laws in these states is ridiculous too. Also the use of FB to spread misinformation and disinformation is sickening. Average people don't have the critical thinking skills to discern real from unreal.
user1

"Tighter laws to protect integrity" = "We don't want poor people with low access to voting to vote against us".
user1

exactly. everything is very one sided, becuase they want to stay in power
