Republicans are absolutely more hypocritical. I'm seeing that on a local level in my town right now. Republican town council members voted down the budget proposed by the democratic schoolboard. The approved budget was less than half of what was requested. Now republicans all over town are demanding armed security officers at every school...with what money???

Agreed. Many republicans say many things during their campaigns, but do the complete opposite during their term.

For instance, the supreme court justices. From what I remember, I think one or two of them said they're pro-choice regarding abortion, but the latest news says otherwise.
user2

It drives me crazy to see how republicans want to micromanage and dictate what women can do with their bodies, yet they want there to be no rules or regulations over who can buy or own a gun.
user1

It's completely hypocritical. They express "My body, my choice" for vaccines, but women can't use that slogan for abortions.
user2

Absolutely the definition of hypocritical.
user1

Also they want to "save babies" but don't want there to be any social programs to help those babies once they are children, teens, adults, and elderly
user1

I do have to say that some Democrats are hypocritical too. My mayor campaigned for less housing, and then 3 years later we have hundreds of apartment complexes being built, which is causing major traffic.
user2

I'm sure being hypocritical is an issue with many politicians on both sides. They say whatever they can to get elected and then do what makes the most sense monetarily.
user1

Agreed. Integrity is lost in both parties, but more so Republicans.
user2

"Not for me, but for thee." This quote is sadly too real.
user2

Exactly. We all know that republican politician's mistresses and teen daughters are having abortions.
user1

Even if they get caught, they always find a weak reason to excuse themselves.
