I think both sides can be hypocritical at times, but Republicans are far more often
user1

Both political camps are certainly hypocritical at times, but Republicans are moreso. Consider their abortion and gun stances. They are pro-life but anti gun laws that would save lives.
user2

I see you agree. Can you think of an instance?
user2

For example,, Republicans want to talk about wanting to save babies, but then not provide support for foster care or adoptions
user1

Yes, gun control is another perfect example
user1

Yes, I thought of that too. What about Democrats? I feel there is some hypocrisy around welfare. They want to lift people out of poverty but favor welfare which tends to keep people mired in poverty.
user2

I totally agree with that as well. We have way too many assistance programs. I am all for programs to temporarily assist people when needed, but no one should be able to "live off the system" for their entire life
user1

I also agree with your example of gun laws. It angers me that Republicans are more concerned with the kickbacks they receive from the NRA then with stopping this senseless violence killing our children
user1

I'm having a harder time thinking of hypocrisy among Democrats! For Republicans, the whole state rights versus federal rights is an issue too. Or the electoral college. They think it's great for state elections to be decided on popular vote, but not federal.
user2

They overall are not fair in their desires. A policy is a policy, regardless of which side it might assist at any given time
user1

Anything to do with religion is automatically a source of hypocracy. And think of all the scandals -- they usually involve fundamental Christian conservatives.
user2

I think another example for democrats would be that they want Republicans to compromise, but then aren't always willing to do the same
user1

I feel the GOP conservatives always accuse Dems of what they themselves are guilty of [pedos, etc.]
user2

I think any extreme thinking on any side is detrimental to the country.
user1

Oh, absolutely. I always say that any republican who is overly vocal against gay rights is a closet gay themselves
user1

Yes. And what about the whole Antifa accusation, when it was conservative [nationalistic] groups that were terrorizing the nation.
user2

Yes about the homophobia. Sorry I get ahead of myself. I kind of suck at chatting online!
user2

That made me angry. It was very clear that January 6th was all trumpsters, and they tried to blame it on left wing groups! Come on!
user1