I think Republicans are more hypocritical. They contradict themselves frequently.
user1

I whole heartedly agree. They talk from both sides of their mouth.
user2

Yes, the entire idea that they are for "small government" is contradicted by the laws they pass and attempt to pass.
user1

True, it's all about what they can gain for their states in terms of money. I also think they have led us to be a large corporation instead of a democracy.
user2

They are no longer for the people. In the beginning the Republican party was all about the little ings flipped.guy, then th
user2

I agree, and would add that the money that they get for their states rarely goes towards the people in those states.
user1

Right. The people who are paying them off are the ones who get all the money.
user2

Social service programs and education is often underfunded, as are roads. Taxes are cut to attract jobs, but few rules are in place to make those jobs attractive to workers.
user1

I agree, They try to take abortion rights away from women, but then wont fund critical services like WIC, snap or mediciad. You ce it both ways.an't hav
user2

you can't have it both ways.
user2

Too much focus is placed on trying to regulate "morality" which goes against the idea of small government.
user1

Yes, exactly. It's hypocritical to say you care about children but then refuse to help children.
user1

Why do they focus on morality? Christian Right influence?
user2

I think it is phony, but they use religion to gain support of people based on conviction rather than actual fairness or law.
user1

It also doesn't take various religions into consideration, or people that aren't religious.
user1

I've heard alot of that lately. That we need to be more religious in how we run this country, or how we control our government, but isn't there a seperation of church and state for a reason?
