I think Republicans are more hypocritical. All their talk of "Pro-Life" yet they make no laws or programs to support mothers or children after birth.
user1

I think both parties fall victim to being hypocritical. This is evident through daily news stories. One party will point a finger at the other for wrongdoing and then they will go and do something similar the next day.

We need universal maternity leave, free infant care, free pre-k, the list goes on.
user1

I do agree with your point too Kimber.
user2

There is so little that is done to help mothers and mothers to be.
user2

And the recent school shooting in Texas highlights how many Republicans refuse to do anything about gun control
user1

All of their policies seem to be about control of others' lives but do nothing to support the people in their daily lives or struggles.
user1

That is also a very good point. It is a devastating problem with too weak of answers for us right now. As a mother of three. It is absolutely terrifying.
user2

They want to try to shift the blame to 'mental health' or arming teachers- which is a ridiculous idea- instead of enforcing age limits on gun purchases, etc.
user1

I'm a mother myself and I'm scared to send my little one to school.
user1

We're the only country in the world that had this issue.
user1

More than age limits need to be enforced. 18 years old is certainly not a developed brain. It is sad.
user2

I agree. Do you think Republican voters agree with their representatives' policies?
user1

I do not. I feel like many fof us are actually much more aligned in the middle.
user2

In my state at least, it seems as though they vote against their own self interests.
user1

Yes, I see that as well. There is alot of wanting to "win" rather than wanting to truly fix things.
user2

I would have thought that most people were in the middle some years ago but the Republican party has seemed to swing far far right these days
user1

I agree with you on the wanting to win aspect. I wish bipartisanship was a reality in more topics.
