Clearly Republicans. There is a collection of articles that frequently pops up on Reddit where they link sources to various stories: eg
user1

I agree that republications are always more hypocritical in politics. they want to win everyone over by saying what we want to hear not what they are thinking
user2

22% of Democrats support Obama Syrian strikes, 18% Repubs support. However, you then see 22% of Democrats support Trump Syrian strikes, 86% Repubs support.
user1

Or how it suddenly became far less important for a president to be free of moral failings when Trump was elected among evangelicals.
user1

They have certainly demonstrated party over people.
user1

Yes, if they were for people then they would be doing what is right. they have laws set in place as well for them rather than the best interest of the people, thought they will speak for us and say that it was for us along
user2

The fact that they typically take the moral high ground but are overwhelmingly the ones involved in moral misconduct, or the projection involving voter fraud comes to mind.
user1

Exactly. They seem to revel in obstructionism.
user1

Many of them did at one point go againt trump but when biden was elected then they were all back on trumps side
user2

Mitch McConnell in particular bragging about blocking legislation no matter what.
user1

Indeed. They know how it can help with a certain demographic.
user1

A very vocal and passionate demo!
user1

even with all going on with covid as well trump said we had to all wear mask and obey laws yet he wasnt doing a single one
user2

Is that when he got booed for suggesting you should get vaccinated? That was telling
user1