That's tough in some ways, because Republican representatives show you who they are up front, whereas Democrat reps get mad about the Roe vs Wade leaked decision, but support anti-abortion colleagues like Henry Cuellar
user1

but just people who are registered with those parties? We are all hypocrits in some ways
user1

I strongly feel that Republicans are more hypocritical. They claim to be pro-life and want to ban abortion, but they don't care or want to provide for any of those children once they are born. They constantly argue against SNAP, welfare, daycare assistance, raising minimum wage, free school lunches, medicaid, yu name it.,
user2

I also don't understand how people who claim to be pro-life are not concerned about the constant gun violence and slaughter, especially at schools, where children should be able to feel safe.
user2

I feel you. And I do believe Republican political representatives are that way. But not necessarily people. We all say and feel wild ways in a moment that could be hypocritical
user1

It's a twisted "logic" they create for themselves
user1

They have their go-to talking points about "maniacs"
user1

I agree. I do personally know some Republicans who are kind and decent people. But too often, they listen to the propaganda spewed by the conservative politicians and media.
user2

i dont think ive heard that word more often than when there's another school shooting
user1

if we had media laws like the UK, channels like FoxNews(not to mention Newsmax or OAN) would have to follow laws where facts and truth matter in media
user1

I so very much agree with that. Those channels are poisonous. When the news broke about the shooting in Texas, conservatives I know were quick to mention that the gunman was killed by Border Patrol Agents, which lead them to incorrectly assume that he was an illegal alien who had crossed the border just prior to the shooting.
user2

I see the hypocrisy every day with my senator, who perpetrated the largest medicaid/medicare fraud in history at the time, and now wants to take money from seniors
user1

good grief
user1

stay safe out there
user1

I will try to. You stay safe as well.
