I think Republicans are more hypocritical. They are finding ways to complain about something, while doing noting to fix the problem.
user1

I think that Republicans are more hypocritical because they frame themselves as the morally correct, small government party, but they often act in morally incorrect ways (according to their own beliefs) and vouch for more government overreach
user2

Well at least we agree. Everyone is saying that Trump did a better job in office, but there was so much trouble when he was in.
user1

I agree with you JR, they also bash democrats for not fixing problems while they have the majority in office. Yet, they don't try to fix those same problems while in office
user2

Yes, and I think the consequences of Trump's presidency will continue to arise for years to come
user2

There is no perfect form of government. I think that everyone no matter what should work together to make things better for the country.
user1

I agree. It seems like lately that Republicans are more interested in making sure the country is better for only certain parts of America
user2

Like the gas prices, they seem to rise every 4-5 years and everyone always blames the president or war. If everyone works together they might be able to sit down and actual figure something out instead of always arguing about stuff.
user1

I also think it is hypocritical that Republicans want to "make America great again", but part of what made America great in the past was acceptance of immigrants, families being able to thrive on one income, and investing in science and technology
user2

Oh yes, there could be much more cooperation controlling gas prices, but of course of lot of that is influenced by global conditions outside of our control
user2

Yes, that is true. The older values of life should be brought back. American was great and could be great again with working together.
user1

We have a pipeline that could be opened and could help out this country.
user1

I wish that the parties would work together not only to increase oil supply to decrease prices but also reduce our dependence on oil products so that gas prices would be less of an issue at all
user2

I also think it is hypocritical that republicans boast that they are the party that loves to protect babies while voting against provisions to increase the formula supply
user2