I believe that Republicans are more hypocritical.
user1

They talk about wanting to change policies, but they never do.
user1

I agree, although that really isn't my main issue with them. I just think they're wrong about issues.
user2

I agree with that. They do have the wrong mindset from the jump on these issues.
user1

That's actually my biggest problem with them as well.
user1

I kind of dislike the hypocrisy "gotcha" that happens when a politician changes opinions. I mainly care if they are right now.
user2

Exactly. I want our politicians to actually care about the people. Instead, they only care about money and what benefits them the most.
user1

That being said, I think Republicans are hypocritical on the deficit. They only point it out when Demos are in power.
user2

Agreed.
user1

If some of these negative events actually happened to Republican leaders, then I believe they would change their stance on these issues.
user1

It is all based on selfishness. Democrats actually care about the well-being of everybody.
user1

Yes. Many seem to care about issues only when it affects them. E.g., they'll support Federal funding for a disease only when their child suffers from it.
user2

Republicans, that is.
user2

That is very true. Republicans live in their own bubble.
user1

I wish there was a way for everyone to come together and unite for the betterment of the country, but I do not think that will ever happen.
user1

Also, Republicans care about the "well being" of everybody on selective moral issues. E.g., sex issues, they often don't want you to do something because they're afraid it hurts others.
user2

Exactly!
user1