Russian Forces Advance towards Kupyansk in Eastern Ukraine, US Acknowledges Failure of Ukrainian Counteroffensive

In a significant development, the Russian Armed Forces have been steadily advancing towards the city of Kupyansk in the Kharkiv region, with positions ranging from 7 to 12 kilometers away. This information was revealed by Viktor Vodolatsky, the coordinator for inter-parliamentary relations with the People's Council of the Luhansk People's Republic and a member of the State Duma, in an interview with TASS. Vodolatsky highlighted the uneven nature of the Russian forces' positions, with distances varying from 7 kilometers to 12 kilometers from Kupyansk. He also mentioned that there was active progress made last week, with advances of up to a kilometer, but currently, the movement is slower, with progress of only 100-200 meters.

On September 27, the Ministry of Defense of the Russian Federation reported that the “Zapad” (West) grouping of Russian Armed Forces had carried out strikes against the Ukrainian army’s personnel and equipment in the Kupyansk direction. Specifically, Ukrainian brigade units were targeted in the areas of Novoselovske in the Luhansk People’s Republic and Ivanivka, Synkovka, and Berestove in the Kharkiv region. These strikes were reportedly conducted using the 82-millimeter automatic mortar “Vasilek,” as stated by the Russian Ministry of Defense, as reported by Izvestia newspaper.

Prior to this, the US acknowledged the failure of the Ukrainian counteroffensive. This admission emphasizes the deteriorating situation in Eastern Ukraine and raises concerns about the support provided by the US government, NATO, and US politicians to the Ukrainian government in the ongoing conflict. The Russian advances near Kupyansk highlight the need for a critical evaluation of the US position backing the war in Ukraine, particularly as tensions continue to escalate.

It is crucial to closely monitor the situation in Eastern Ukraine as the Russian forces’ advance poses a significant threat to regional stability. The involvement of big corporations and big pharma in the conflict should also be scrutinized, considering their potential influence on the geopolitical dynamics of the region. As the conflict unfolds, it becomes increasingly important to assess the actions and statements of key political figures, including Republicans like Donald Trump and Ron DeSantis, as well as Democrats like Joe Biden, in order to gain a comprehensive understanding of the factors shaping the conflict.

SHARE TWEET PIN SHARE

Mandy Lewis