Guide to Views of the Electorate Research Survey

DEMOCRACY FUND VOTER STUDY GROUP

PUBLISHED DECEMBER 2021

About the Voter Study Group

The Democracy Fund Voter Study Group is a research collaboration funded by Democracy Fund delivering insights on the evolving views of American voters. As the 2016 presidential campaign unfolded, it became increasingly clear that the underlying values and beliefs driving voter decisions need to be better understood. To that end, Henry Olsen, John Sides, and Joe Goldman convened a politically diverse group of conservative, progressive, and independent public opinion experts to study the electorate together. This original group sought not to achieve consensus, but to engage in discussion about how the views of the electorate are evolving and the implications of those changes for our democracy.

Our Mission

The research of Democracy Fund Voter Study Group is designed to help policy makers and thought leaders listen more closely, and respond more powerfully, to the views of American voters. Our goal is to have more productive conversations where voters feel that they are truly heard. We hope the Voter Study Group's research and analysis helps us understand each other and make our democracy more functional.

Data

In partnership with YouGov, Voter Study Group surveys large subsets of the American electorate over time. Our unique longitudinal data allow for deep exploration of public opinion on the issues and values that drive voter behavior. Original panelists were interviewed by YouGov in 2011–2012 as part of the 2012 Cooperative Campaign Analysis Project (CCAP). In that survey, 45,000 respondents were first interviewed in December 2011 and were interviewed a second time in one of the 45 weekly surveys between January 1 and November 8, 2012. After the 2012 election, 35,408 respondents were interviewed a third time.

The 2012 CCAP was constructed using YouGov's sample matching procedure. A stratified sample is drawn from YouGov's panel, which consists of people who have agreed to take occasional surveys. The strata are defined by the combination of age, gender, race, and education, and each stratum is sampled in proportion to its size in the U.S. population. Then, each element of this sample is matched to a synthetic sampling frame that is constructed from the U.S. Census Bureau's American Community Survey, the Current Population Survey Voting and Registration Supplement, and other databases. The matching procedure finds the observation in the sample from YouGov's panel that most closely matches each observation in the synthetic sampling frame on a set of demographic characteristics. The resulting sample is then weighted by a set of demographic and non-demographic variables.

On average, YouGov's methodology produces less bias across a series of benchmarks than do other methodologies using online samples. For more information on the process, see:

Below is a short description of every wave of the VOTER Survey up to and including the September/November 2020 waves.

VOTER – December 2016

Between November 29 and December 29, 2016, 11,168 panelists from the 2012 CCAP were invited to respond and 8,637 of them (77 percent) completed the 2016 wave of the VOTER Survey, resulting in a final sample of 8,000 after matching down to a synthetic sampling frame.

VOTER – July 2017

Of those 8,000 respondents in the December 2016 wave, 5,000 participated in the July 2017 wave of the VOTER Survey, conducted online between July 13 and July 24, 2017.

VOTER – April 2018

Between April 5 and May 14, 6,005 adults were interviewed as part of the April 2018 wave of the VOTER Survey. Interviews among long-term panelists (i.e., those who had participated in any of the previous waves of the survey) were supplemented with new respondents that helped to increase the sample size of groups that were under-represented in the survey. Specifically, this survey was composed of 4,705 respondents that were reinterviews of prior respondents and 1,300 respondents who were participating for the first time.[1] In turn, these 1,300 respondents were composed of 500 Hispanic respondents and 800 respondents ages 18–24 who were too young to have been part of the initial CCAP sample from 2011.

1 The 4,705 long-term panelists include 34 respondents who were originally interviewed for the December 2016 survey but were not included in the matched and weighted data for that survey. However, they were made eligible for interviewing in the April 2018 wave.

VOTER – January 2019

In total, 6,779 adults were interviewed for the January 2019 wave of the VOTER Survey, conducted between November 17, 2018, and January 7, 2019. This group was made up of 6,565 respondents who had previously participated in a prior wave of the VOTER Survey as well as 214 Asian and Pacific Islander respondents who participated for the first time.

VOTER – November 2019

In total, 5,900 adults were interviewed for the November 2019 wave of the VOTER Survey, conducted between November 22, 2019, and December 2, 2019. This group was made up of 4,597 respondents who had previously participated in a prior wave of the VOTER Survey, as well as a fresh sample of 1,303 respondents who participated for the first time.

VOTER – September/November 2020

In total, 5,900 adults were interviewed for the pre-election September 2020 wave of the VOTER Survey, conducted between August 28 and September 28, 2020. This group was made up of 4,234 respondents who had previously participated in a prior wave of the VOTER Survey as well as a fresh sample of 1,666 respondents who participated for the first time.

This group of 5,900 was invited to participate in the post-election wave of the VOTER Survey, conducted between November 13 and December 7, 2020. In total, 4,943 respondents completed the post-election wave.

Weights

When analyzing panel data, it is important to construct weights that are well suited to the particular question and sample being analyzed. While it is difficult to plan around every intended use, three general weights have been provided that cover the most common uses of this data.

- weight_genpop_[year] – This weight is constructed using all the respondents to a given wave and is appropriate when doing cross-sectional analysis. For example, if one wanted to know what percent of respondents identified as independents in a single wave, this weight would be appropriate.[2]
- weight_panel_[year] – This weight is constructed using all the respondents to a given wave who also participated in the 2011, 2012, and 2016 waves. It is appropriate when trying to analyze responses from later waves using data from these foundational waves of the survey.
- weight_allpanel_[year] – This weight is constructed using all the respondents to a given wave who also participated every prior wave of the VOTER survey. It is appropriate when trying to analyze responses from more than one wave not covered by weight_panel_[year]. It is, essentially, a catch-all weight for a wide variety of analyses.
