Context: The Project on Human Development in Chicago Neighborhoods (PHDCN), originally Felton Earls (PI), Jeanne Brooke-Gunn, Stephen Raudenbush, and Robert Sampson (Scientific Directors); the Mixed-Income Project (MIP), Robert Sampson and Robert Mare (PIs); and ongoing follow-up studies (PHDCN+) directed by Robert Sampson and David Kirk (PIs) (see also Sampson et al. 2022); are complex social science endeavors that involve a large composite of measures, confidential data collected from adults, children, and administrative agencies, and that at any time involve IRB agreements and multiple investigators. The PIs are charged with maintaining data confidentiality agreements, securing IRB approval and adherence, overseeing research conducted on publicly restricted data, and coordinating research.

By completing and signing the DUA and accessing the files, users agree not to use the data other than for reproducibility purposes and in no case shall any attempts to be made to link other sources of information or to use combinations of variables to identify individuals.
