Covid Shots Kill And Injure Hundreds

55 in the US, 22 in UK and 29 in Norway known to have died after taking the shot

by DARREN SMITH

While the world's governments, corporations and media system are all guns ablaze pushing the experimental drugs from Pfizer, Moderna and AstraZeneca/Oxford Group, the injuries and deaths occurring within hours, days or weeks after receiving the injections should make people pause for thought before getting the shots themselves.

Despite covid-19 deaths including anyone dying of anything at all within 28 days of a positive PCR test result, all reports referring to the pharma deaths include press releases from the multi-billion pound corporations making them which invariably state: 'it is not known yet whether the vaccine is responsible' - this despite perfectly healthy people like Dr. Michael Gregory of Florida dying after receiving the Pfizer shot. He was a 56-year-old medical worker at Mount Sinai Medical Center in Miami, and was injected on Dec. 18 last year. 16 days later, he died.

Michael's wife Heidi Neckelmann said on Facebook that her husband was "very healthy" before being injected. She said he was admitted to an intensive care unit with a diagnosis of acute idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura, a blood disorder, caused by a reaction to the shot. "Do not let his death be in vain, please save more lives by making this information news," she said.

At The Commons on St. Anthony nursing home in Auburn, New York, 21 residents have died at the home and three in the hospital, but there had been no nursing home covid-19 deaths in Cayuga County at all until the first three deaths at the Commons were reported Dec. 29. They began injecting on Dec 22nd.

In Ireland, Doctor Kershav Sharma a respiratory consultant who practiced in Wexford hospital, took the shot on Tuesday 5th of January. Five days later he was found dead at his home.

Legendary baseball player Hank Aaron died 18 days after receiving the Moderna injection, in an attempt to encourage black Americans to take it.

In India, a 52-year-old hospital worker in Moradabad, Uttar Pradesh died a day after receiving the injection. The man's son told local media that he believed his father had a "bit of pneumonia, cough and cold" before taking the shot, but "started feeling worse" after the injection. The man later complained of congestion and chest pain and was rushed to the hospital, where he was declared dead.

A second death was reported in Bellary in Karnataka. The 43-year-old male was injected on Saturday and died on Monday. The government says the man suffered from cardiopulmonary failure. It's unclear which drug he was given. India granted emergency approval to two variants of the covid-19 drug earlier this month: Bharat Biotech's Covaxin, and Covishield, a jab based on the AstraZeneca/Oxford formula and manufactured by the Serum Institute of India. A 46-year-old healthcare worker named Mahipal Singh also died on the 17th of Jan. just 24 hours after being administered the Covishield coronavirus vaccine shot according to Businesstoday.in.

29 people are known to have died in Norway within days of receiving their first dose of the Pfizer covid-19 shot, with 13 of those deaths apparently related to the side effects, health officials admitted. All 13 were nursing home patients and at least 80 years old.

Specialists from Germany's Paul Ehrlich Institute are looking into the deaths of 10 people who passed away soon after having received shots, Brigitte Keller-Stanislawski, the head of the institute's department of safety of medicinal products and medical devices, stated.

Artwork by LIAM HUNT

In Britain, 22 people at a care home in Basingstoke, Hampshire run by Avery Healthcare all died after receiving the shot since Jan. 5th. There is no rational reason why the MHRA and all concerned are not linking the deaths to the shots, but they insist on denying it instead.

Stockton-on-Tees nurse Demi Lambe reported being paralysed after receiving the shot, unfortunately she was still in this condition at the time of going to press.

Julie and Jerry Christensen suffered the tragic loss of Julie's mother, writing on social media: "My mother was exactly one month from her 80th birthday, had no underlying health conditions, and like a light switch, became unresponsive. I'm broken-hearted that we were separated for the past ten months due to senior care home covid regulations and now we are forever physically separated. I don't even know how to share this with my family and friends. It is so alarming, shocking, and hard to swallow for all of us. I can't hide it any longer."

Janette Brown's father took seriously ill after receiving a covid shot. She wrote on Facebook, after the tech giant had removed her original post: "he has had a serious reaction to it like many others I have spoken to now around the world; his body can not stay still for one second to allow him to rest - it's agony as it's constantly jerking, like convulsions. I have never in my life seen anything like this, the hospital said they can't help as they don't know what this injection causes yet so we are stuck."

Gibraltar had suffered relatively little from covid before the 9th January this year, with only 17 deaths for the whole period. Since then, 'covid deaths' per million have rocketed to 3rd place on the Worldometer site. 36 more deaths in little over a week after the RAF flew in nearly 6,000 Pfizer shots, cooled to -70C by dry ice. They were put to use quickly to avoid the risk of degradation. Once again a clear relationship between roll-out and increased 'covid deaths.'

Zachary Steiber reports in the Epoch Times, 55 deaths following covid injections in the United States: "In some cases, patients died within days of being vaccinated."

A 66-year-old senior home resident in Colorado, was sleepy and stayed in bed the day after getting Moderna's injection. Early the next morning, he "was observed in bed lying still, pale, eyes half open and foam coming from mouth and unresponsive." The VAERS report states: "He was not breathing and with no pulse."

First Mask Discrimination Case Settled For £7,000

A disabled woman assisted by Kester Disability Rights has been paid £7,000 in compensation by a service provider who refused her access to a service because she was unable to wear a face mask.

The pay-out was achieved through negotiation as there was no dispute that access had been denied, or that the Claimant had a disability exemption. The only thing to be agreed was the amount of compensation, not whether it was due or not.

Refusing access to people unable to wear face coverings due to disability is direct discrimination–no different to denying access to a black or gay person for example.

Disabled people are now routinely harassed in public for not wearing face coverings–frequently given the impression that confidential medical information must be publicly disclosed to justify exemption.
The fact that shops and hospitality businesses routinely display "no mask no entry" signs shows how deeply disablist attitudes are embedded in society. If premises displayed "no blacks" or "no gays" notices there would be outrage.

Several supermarkets began vigorously challenging those exempt from wearing a face mask last month as the Johnson regime ramped up its fearmongering through compliant and unquestioning channels such as the BBC and Sky News.

Emails received back from their head offices and shared widely on social media reminded staff that it was illegal to question why someone was exempt, and refusing entry or service could well result in a prosecution and hefty fines for which staff themselves were personally liable.

Fortunately the official government position does not endorse any of this as nobody exempt from wearing a mask is expected to go around justifying themselves. Saying "I'm exempt" is enough. If the response to that can be proved to be discriminatory then compensation is due. Any such interaction, altercation and blatant discrimination should be video recorded for evidence, as the Kester case proves there is remedy in law for those who are offended against.

Children No Longer Matter - Open Schools NOW

by ROD GRANT

A Private school headmaster in Newbridge, Edinburgh has hit out at the government's wrecking of education.

Taking to the Clifton Hall School Facebook page, Rod Grant wrote: "Children no longer matter. In 31 years of teaching, I don't think I've ever felt so despondent and so concerned at the same time. Our world is in the grip of a pandemic and governments across the globe have poured billions of pounds into fighting it and in trying to support the lockdown strategy. Makes me wonder why we couldn't tackle other issues globally and so ferociously in terms of spend.

What about the climate emergency? The obesity pandemic? The fact that in 2021 we still have people living on the street; that it takes an international footballer, Marcus Rashford, to shame the British government into feeding children during school holidays. And what does that also tell us about the current levels of poverty in the UK?

What about the 1500 people that die every day in the UK from the big three: heart disease, strokes and cancer-related illnesses. Why haven't we taken these issues as seriously as we have a virus which is likely to end up with a mortality rate of well below 1%, and which, according to the Office for National Statistics has an average age of death in the UK of 83. Meanwhile, in Glasgow, Scotland's largest city, men have a life expectancy of 71.

I'm not a conspiracy theorist; I'm not some radical on the fringes of a fringe," he added, "I'm just a teacher and this is what I see: In the last three months, in my school and in schools like it, I am witnessing mental health issues unlike anything I've seen in my career. This is not me trying to be dramatic or to overplay what lockdown actually does to children.

I am seeing children being diagnosed with clinical depression, increasing rates of self-harm (even in Scotland, where we already had the highest rate of self-harm in 15-year-old girls anywhere in the world, bar one), suicidal ideation and, something I haven't seen for at least 20 years, a resurgence of eating disorders.

Add to this, those students who are displaying worrying levels of stress and anxiety; the same students that describe online learning as stress inducing.

Anyone that has been involved in a Zoom meeting knows how stressful it can be and yet the great solution to our educational recovery is online learning. Well, I'm an educator and I think, at best, it's a horribly poor substitute for in-school learning.

Right throughout this pandemic, the needs of our children seem to be at the bottom of every Government's priority list. The cynic in me might suggest that it is because they can't vote. Fortunately, I'm not cynical. To me, it's actually just as worrying though to suggest that kids don't really matter that much if they are not dying."

The frustrated teacher continued: "At the moment, there seems to be no alternative voice; no political party willing to stand up for children's plight, no media criticism; merely, more nodding in agreement that lockdown is the only solution.

Well, just remember in our attempts to suppress a virus and 'to save the NHS' that the price we pay is the downward spiral in the mental well-being of our children and a legacy of under-achievement as a result.

Last summer, individual children were the lowest priority in Government as seen in the examination results fiasco. As of the 2nd January, there is not one single hospital bed available for any young person suffering from mental health issues anywhere in Scotland. The current waiting time for a mental health appointment with CAMHS in the Lothians is six months. Utterly disgraceful.

Children need to be with their friends. They need to play. They need to develop their social and academic skills. How dare we have created an environment where a 5-year-old can say, 'I can't play with Freddy because he's not part of my bubble'. It is the stuff of nonsense and it is our children who will end up being this lockdown's 'collateral damage'.

Schools need to be OPEN and they need to open NOW."

In another case, a 93-year-old South Dakota man was injected with the Pfizer-BioNTech drug on Jan. 4 around 11 a.m. About two hours later, he said he was tired and couldn't continue with the physical therapy he was doing. He was taken back to his room, where he said his legs felt heavy. Soon after, he stopped breathing. A nurse declared a do-not-resuscitate order.

Pfizer stated: "The number of incidents so far is not alarming, and in line with expectations."

It is saying something when a company can accurately predict deaths from its products and be championed by governments and media outlets. This is more a grand marketing campaign than a health epidemic. What is most alarming is the very real potential for the 'vaccine' marketing campaign to indeed cause a very real health crisis, as we seem to have the beginnings of here. Everyone must fully research for themselves and not automatically trust those eagerly trying to sell you their solution.

UK Gov Quietly Extends Lockdown Until July 31st

by DARREN SMITH

The Daily Telegraph reported on 23rd Jan that the Johnson regime had effectively extended the UK Lockdown until July, earlier in the month.

They have given councils the powers to continue to threaten, harass, fine and close any businesses that have realised being forced to close is unlawful and unconstitutional ab initio.

While this does not affect those on furlough schemes and other handouts from the government for doing nothing, millions upon millions of jobs and livelihoods will be forever gone if people continue to comply with this unBritish draconian state-type rule over people's freedoms.

Using fear as their primary weapon, they have conditioned the minds of millions through the power of propaganda and control over all broadcast channels, to believe that living normally is over now because of an alleged virus that has yet to be fully isolated from any infected person anywhere in the world.

To think the now very well-documented detrimental effects of these disastrous policies–alarming suicide rates, abuse, illness, childrens' health and death are simply dismissed by ministers as unimportant but necessary consequences of dealing with a public health pandemic should put most compassionate people on a collision course with this uncompromising regime.

As long as they are pushing towards sales of their trial genetic experimental drugs, they will continue to deflect, deride, deny and drum in project fear through the television screens night after night.

Meanwhile business owners have a choice: wait until your business goes under or open up now in the knowledge that any fines imposed or other unlawful action can be challenged in court where the government would have to prove a) there is a genuine pandemic and not a media one; and b) their responses are necessary and proportionate.

From Science To Dogma

by Dr. URMIE RAY

How did we reach a stage where unprecedented dystopian measures are justified in the name of one of man's noblest pursuits?

The greater closeness between science and technology in modern times is not in itself directly responsible. Rather, the quality of this closeness, and hence the orientation of European science, were highly influenced by the perspective of profit maximisation within which it developed. As stated in its first charter, the Royal Society aimed at "promoting the sciences of natural things and of useful arts", and its ranks included prominent merchants with no scientific or technical background. Science, technology, and commerce were thus officially made into interconnected ventures from the outset.

Conversely, the first stage of the shift from merchant to financial capitalism was enabled by both science and mathematics. Principia Mathematica, as explicitly stated by Newton, was as much motivated by astronomical concerns as by desires to improve machinery. Alongside, chemistry played a prominent role in bringing science closer to industry. Efficient mechanisation contributed to expanding industries, extensive colonies, civilian and military transport back and forth, as well as population growth. These required increasingly more energy.

The new field of thermodynamics - the study of the conversion of heat into work – was born in the early 19th century, motivated by the need to improve the steam engine. Electrodynamics, the other major scientific achievement of the time, stemmed as much from the desire to understand a natural phenomenon as from the necessity to magnify the efficacy of the transformation of kinetic energy into work.

The study of electricity contributed to a major change: the integration of research within industrial settings, with little to no connection between research and management, research being subservient to the latter. In the framework of the anonymous shareholder system, it must incessantly aim for a maximum amount of ever more profit. In other words, a capitalism where the aim is not just profit, but its maximisation, was now in place.

This influenced science as a whole, even within academic institutions. Not only was the goal of science transformed into the sustenance of profit making but it was itself transformed into a wealth-generating activity. The notions of intellectual property and of patents were elaborated at this time, and had begun to be actively exploited by scientists. The value of a scientific piece of work was now given by the amount of money it occasioned. It is not that science is above or below money, it simply has no relation to it. Hence, the choice of an inappropriate criterion for science opened the path towards its distortion.

Indeed, science, being the reasoned study based on reproducible and sufficiently reproduced observation of properties describable through comparison of the sense-perceptible world – a study encompassing interactions with natural surroundings – must at any given time conform to all known data. It thus warns us when the gap between our theories and reality becomes too significant. It indicates when the impact of our actions on our environment generates alterations to natural conditions that may be harmful for us, at least once this impact is detectable by existing means.

Hence, an economic system can no longer be sustained or justified by science once it induces inordinate alterations. Incessant and increasing material growth must perforce rely on advanced research, generating incessant and increasing alterations to our environment, which become less and less suited to human life. So there must come a point where to maintain course this research loses its scientific nature and refutes science itself.

As profits kept soaring, this point was crossed unnoticed. Thus science, the opposite of dogma – always open to the modification or abandonment of its theories in view of later data, powerful precisely because it recognises its limits, was distorted into a new creed, scientism – a set of tenets which claim to be science, yet do not display its characteristics, in particular which do not rest on sufficiently reproduced and reproducible observation-based reasoning. They must therefore be taken on faith.

Deviating from a scientific path was eased by the shortcomings science is riddled with. The complexity of nature is beyond human comprehension, forcing us to simplify and thus to found our theories on approximations and assumptions. We may be guided by the quest for truth but we can never know whether our ever-evolving scientific understanding is taking us towards any truth. What it does is guide us away from untruths.

Accepting untruths in the name of truth for more than a thousand years has left profound traces on European science, especially as the latter never got sufficient space and time for a serene development away from religious or political pressures. All too rapidly institutions of learning, which had been under Church control, were brought under that of centralised governments.

Belief in divine miracles was replaced by belief in a miraculous science that would better (indeed, has bettered) material life, as well as provide the answers to the basic questions of life; belief in the objectivity of religious dogmas became belief in an objective science whose sayings are indisputable. All signs to the contrary were ignored until quantum mechanics forced their consideration. However, the damage was already done, and any reassessment has largely gone unheeded.

Science is a search for unity underlying diversity and recognises its own subjectivity, while scientism cloaked with characteristics mistakenly attributed to science formerly, seeks to uniformise under one world view as it professes to mirror the truth, which must therefore be enforced on all. In the name of Christianity distorted into dogma, the full repressive power of the Church was unleashed on cowering populations. In the name of science distorted into dogma, the full repressive power of the State is now unleashed on cowering populations.

Like spiritual aspirations formerly, scholarly ones are now enmeshed in moneymaking. Research has become fully entrenched in the global marketplace. Its subservience to the economic ideal or simply conformism is maintained by funding policies and by a culture of prize, initiated by a forefront industrialist of the then nascent military-industrial complex, Alfred Nobel, precisely when monitoring research became essential.

When the content of research is closely monitored, when the watchwords are competitiveness, efficiency and standardisation, when a self-appointed coterie heap congratulations on each other, when those pretending to speak in the name of science have forgotten to question, the consequences on the nature and quality of knowledge are evidently most serious

As for the uninitiated, they are kept in awe and made to realise that doctrinal discussions are a matter of experts, just like the spiritual world was once said to be only knowable through the Roman Church's priesthood, so the sense-perceptible world is now said to be only knowable through the new priesthood. The edicts of scientism are shrouded in the mysticism of mathematics, the latter having replaced Latin as the language of the Cognoscente. Thereby the simple is made to look complicated, the absence of solid foundations of a theory is obscured, and attention is diverted from the basic questions.

This is not to say that science is not fighting back. In spite of consequences to themselves, like their predecessors in other sombre periods, scientists are displaying admirable integrity and courage to continue work when it clashes with approved conclusions.

However, by systematically ignoring their warnings and having recourse to outright distortions to keeping to the path of incessant profit, a stage has been reached where resources have nearly been squeezed to their limits and can no longer sustain yet more financial profits. This has resulted in the virtualisation not just of the economy, but of increasing aspects of human life, regarded as a huge computer whose underlying programs can be transformed at will, and which can be merged with the machine.

There is however a basic fallacy with a machine-made virtuality that denies our given reality. It will break in sooner or later. God, if there be one, might or might not 'play dice'. But by attempting to change the basic unalterable principles of life, thereby pretending to be gods, we are certainly playing dice with our own fate.

Face Masks: What We Can Learn From Proxemics

by MATTHEW REYNOLDS

Pro-mask? Just wearing one to be polite or because the telly says you must protect your mate? Forced to don at work unless exempt?

Government mandating of face coverings, ostensibly to mitigate against covid-19 transmission, has proved divisive. Supporters highlight their efficacy as 'source barriers' in trapping SARS Cov-2 virions. If masks truly block the 'rona', why not keep them to suppress other seasonal viruses like flu? Certainly, Jonathan Van Tam, England's deputy chief medical officer, considers mask wearing to be a beneficial 'habit' that ought to continue. So remind us why we're still in lockdown?.

On the other hand, detractors question the 'science' behind mask use. First, SARS Cov-2 aerosol virions, at less than micron in size (one millionth of a metre), are too small to be contained by a fabric weave. Many doctors have compared it to trying to keep out mosquitoes with a chain-link fence. Secondly, thanks to recent randomised control trials, especially the celebrated Danish study of 6000 participants, there is a lack of correlation between masking-up and reducing covid-19 infection.

Finally, if we accept that masks impede viral spread, then might the accumulation of particles render cloth surfaces unhygienic? Dr Vernon Coleman has alerted readers of The Light to the potential hazards: sore throats, chest infections, not to mention shortness of breath and hypercapnia (a build up of carbon dioxide in the bloodstream).

Such discussions are binary, either you believe face coverings work as practical non-pharmaceutical interventions or you don't. If we are to challenge official messaging around face coverings, we must problematise the debate. Proxemics enables us to do so.

What is proxemics (pronounced proxeemics)? Essentially it is the study of how humans organise surrounding space with respect to other people. It was theorised in the 1950s by Edward Hall, an American anthropologist tasked with training diplomats to avoid faux pas when engaging with different cultures.

To achieve this, Hall recognised that human beings on the whole – albeit with slight cultural variations – prefer to manage social interaction over set distances. He formulated four zones; public space where people are comfortable encountering strangers at around 2-4 metres, social space for formal interactions at 1.2-2 metres, personal space for conversing with friends at 0.5-1.2 metres, and intimate space up to 0.5 metres–reserved for contact with close family or romantic partners. Hall's model may be proscriptive, nevertheless it has contemporary application, for example in human / robot collaboration or in virtual reality simulation.

Proxemics is equally relevant to the mask debate; people don't like getting close to one another, and certainly refrain from breathing heavily in each other's direction. Is there something evolutionary at play?

The theme was explored earlier in 2020 within fascinating inter-disciplinary work by Colin Axon, an engineer at Brunel University and the sociologist Robert Dingwall, which deserves to be better known. Writing in the British Medical Journal, both argued how the physical and social sciences could contribute towards the understanding of airborne viral transmission, something lost in the scary graphics shown on TV–you know the simulated manikin exhaling toxic plumes laden with deadly pathogens. Yikes cover your face!

Axon and Dingwall took issue with the imaging, largely because it misses the temperature differential between the human body and its surroundings. As such, exhausted air travels at most 20-30cm from the mouth or nose, yet it egresses upwards, since the body's internal heat, around 37C, is warmer than most outdoor or indoor temperatures. (Think breath condensing on a frosty day). Convection currents surround our faces. These protect us from respiratory mixing short of Hall's personal space, where most human contact occurs.

Admittedly SARS-Cov-2 virions might remain suspended to ensnare the unwary, although the inoculum size would have to be sufficient to induce serious illness, something that matters more within hospitals; covid-19 is nosocomial.

Yet within public indoor settings, where the law enjoins mask use, particle suspension may not be an issue. This can be attributed to the 'stack effect' in buildings, where cold air creates buoyancy for warmer air to trickle through natural ventilation. Commercial buildings, such as supermarkets, restaurants, cinemas (all now mask zones) and offices utilise air conditioning, which is purposefully designed to extract dust and bad odours; while virions follow the direction of travel. Modern trains are similarly equipped. TfL recently found no traces of coronavirus in air tests along its bus and tube networks

Research on the effects of airflow on SARS-Cov-2 virions is ongoing. However, from the perspective of proxemics, face coverings seem a superfluous intervention, more so if – as we know – only one percent of the UK population is infected. What are the chances of an infectious person crossing into your personal space?

Government messaging around masks is disingenuous. Masks hinder everyday social interaction and they were deliberately intended to achieve this. A return to normality means communicating freely. Take off your mask.

Gene-Edited And GM Crops 'Highly Unlikely' To Make Food System More Sustainable

by CLAIRE ROBINSON

Will genetically modified gene-edited crops, foods and animals improve the sustainability of food and farming?

A comprehensive new scientific review addresses this question by investigating the record of old-style transgenic GM crops and the potential and reality of newer gene-edited crops and animals.

The review, by Dr Allison Wilson of the Bioscience Resource Project in the US, is titled, "Will gene-edited and other GM crops fail sustainable food systems?" and forms part of a forthcoming Elsevier book, Rethinking Food and Agriculture. It takes in GM golden rice, GM herbicide-tolerant (HT) crops, and GM Bt insecticidal crops, and looks at the unintended effects of both old-style GM crops and new gene-edited crops.

It finds that "the widespread use of Bt and HT crops has led to the problematic development of pest resistance, superweeds, and secondary pests. In response to these problems, "farmers increased both insecticide and herbicide use. Some also increased tillage and other mechanical methods of weed control."

The review notes that attempts to develop GM golden rice have been plagued with technical difficulties. These include unintended effects such as defective growth and performance and low levels of beta-carotene, the substance that is intended to be converted to vitamin A in the bodies of the malnourished people targeted for the rice.

Other GM crops show a wide variety of unintended traits. Research on large populations of transformants – cells or organisms, such as plants, into which foreign DNA has been introduced – reveal frequent "defects in basic agronomic traits such as yield, height, stem, and leaf morphology" (structure).

Contrary to claims by the GMO lobby that plants with unintended traits are screened out before they are brought to market, Dr Wilson points out that even commercialised GM crops contain many unintended traits, many of which have implications for sustainability. MON810 maize, for example, has numerous compositional differences compared with the non-GM parent crop, including increased lignin (which makes cell walls more rigid), the presence of an allergen, and increased moisture content. MON810 also has negative impacts on beneficial soil organisms. A table in the review lists examples of some of the many unintended traits that have been identified in commercial GM crops.

Will gene editing increase the precision and thus effectiveness of genetic engineering technologies? Dr Wilson writes that the evidence thus far shows that gene editing is "also prone" to introducing unintended effects. This is partly because virtually all gene editing protocols utilize standard GM techniques and also because "new evidence from both animals and plants indicates that gene editing itself can result in unintended mutations at or near the target site". Numerous studies cited in the review "support the conclusion that plant gene editing outcomes are imprecise and unpredictable, and that, depending on the combination of techniques used, gene editing can be highly mutagenic" (causing DNA damage).

As with older-style GM, Dr Wilson notes, the number and type of unintended effects introduced using gene editing will depend in part on the new trait being introduced and in part on the unintended effects wrought on the genome by the techniques themselves. So contrary to the messaging of pro-GMO lobby groups and organisations, Dr Wilson says that there can be no shortcuts when it comes to regulating these techniques: "All benefits, hazards, and risks must therefore be assessed experimentally on a case-by-case basis for each independently derived nGM trait and crop... This should include whole genome sequencing comparisons with an isogenic line and -omic [molecular profiling] analyses."

Dr Wilson concludes, "While in theory it might someday be possible to create a GM crop that meets the broad requirements of sustainable agriculture, in practice this seems highly unlikely to ever happen."

What Exactly Do The WHO Do?

by DUSTIN BROADBERY

The World Health Organisation (WHO) is the embodiment of an organisation whose policy and strategy is directed by the pharmaceutical corporations it apparently regulates and not the citizens it supposedly serves.

This is unsurprising when 76% of WHO funding is from voluntary contributions–notably foundations and pharmaceutical companies who wield unimaginable influence over world health policy. This cosy financing relationship between the regulator and the regulated has resulted in one man alone, the anodyne Bill Gates, being crowned the Tsar of international public health. Why not? Gates contributes 20% of WHO funding through the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation (BMGF) and GAVI–The Vaccine Alliance. It is no secret that money buys influence.

This corporatised takeover of world health policy bears many hallmarks of the Fabian-envisaged world run by a 'body of experts'. Only this time, the 'qualified rulers' are multinational pharmaceutical corporations and billionaires and the role of intergovernmental organisations like the WHO is to help them sell patented drugs.

Not much has changed then since the days of rule by royal dynasties, where the richest and most powerful bloodlines ruled the land. The difference nowadays is that the wealth of billionaires like Gates and the influence of pharmaceutical corporations buys the necessary political influence to set public policy and agenda. In her brilliant documentary, Trust WHO, filmmaker Lilian Franck reveals the unhealthy ties between the WHO and big lobbying firms.

For example, it was not until the late nineties that new regulations began to emerge around the dangers of smoking. This was largely down to big tobacco's lobbying the WHO since the 1950s to downplay the public health risks associated with smoking. This gave rise to the iconic cigarette advertising campaigns of the eighties and the smoking epidemic that followed, despite the dangers of smoking being long understood by health professionals, especially the WHO.

Likewise, the nuclear Industry has been a strong lobbying force behind the WHO around events like Fukushima and Chernobyl, to effectively gloss over the effects of radiation poisoning, in support for the feasibility of nuclear energy.

To fully understand the strategy of the WHO throughout SARS-CoV-2, it is important to note the agency's erroneous declaration of the Swine Flu pandemic in 2009. Following unorthodox relaxing of rules around the definition of a 'pandemic'. Specifically the 'severity of illness' and 'mortality rate'.

Swine Flu brought about a new culture of disease classification where you could now have a pandemic with zero deaths. These amendments took place following secret deals between European governments and pharmaceutical giants GSK, Sanofi and Novartis. Resulting in a paycheque for Big Pharma in the region of $18 billion dollars for a vaccine that was not required, for a pandemic that did not happen. Later, The Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe (PACE) held an emergency inquiry into the "influence" exerted by drug makers over the WHO, for a disease that it transpired killed between one third to one tenth the rate of seasonal flu.

In 2020 the WHO crowned China the global pacemaker for a new phenomena known as lockdowns.

Unsurprising when Tedros Adhanom became the WHO's first non-doctor Director-General, amid allegations of heavy lobbying by CCP diplomats. Adhanom was effectively China's dog in the fight, despite an appalling track record on public health and human rights.

In 2017 Adhanom was accused of covering up three cholera epidemics as Ethiopian Health Minister, when he had served as a central committee member for the Tigray People's Liberation Front–a marxist political party accused of crimes against humanity.

Preceding his appointment at the WHO, Adhanom was Chair of The Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria (an international financing organisation established in 2002 with seed funding from Gates' BMFG. Later he served as a board member of GAVI, another BMGF public health hydra. Prior to 2020 the WHO's reputation was blemished by multiple controversies, with calls from the international community to rethink global health policy and especially the role of the Specialised Agency of the UN.

The Lancet published an independent report calling for the WHO to be stripped of its role in declaring disease outbreaks, and the journal Nature called out their poor response to the Ebola outbreak of April 2014, when it took the agency until August of that year to declare a global emergency.

Later In 2017, the WHO were criticised for allocating $200 million a year for executive travel expenses–exceeding the agency's combined budget to combat AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria. Reminiscent of how the Red Cross raised half a billion dollars for Haiti, and built just six houses.

War On Truth

by KELLY HAYHOE

After waking up in May to the lies being fed to us from the government, my husband and I started attending some of the pro-freedom protests in London.

At one we attended, we were handed a copy of the 2nd issue of The Light Paper. I thought the back page would make a great leaflet, and had 5000 copies printed up to distribute in my local area. I posted my intention to do this on a local public anti-lockdown Facebook group.

I received the leaflets on Wednesday 28th October and posted some that day and the next day. Whilst delivering them, one lady came out of her house and told me she did not want the leaflet, it was dangerous information and to take back my rubbish. I informed her she could put it in the bin if she didn't want it. The weather then took a turn for the worse so I stopped delivery.

She then tracked me down via social media, and others from the Facebook group told me that I had been mentioned on local Facebook pages, with councillors also complaining.

The following Monday evening, I received a visit from two police officers. They asked did I know why they were there? I said "leaflets possibly, but I have not done anything wrong". They agreed and said I hadn't done anything wrong, but there had been complaints of me organising a protest via Facebook at the war memorial on Remembrance Day. I told them I had said that "I am going to the war memorial as usual, to pay my respects and to observe the two minute silence, in protest that the service was cancelled". I added that it was a public post and to go look at it if they needed any other information.

One of the officers then returned the next night with a Community Protection Notice (CPN). Reading through it he stated that I was encouraging people to break the upcoming lockdown. When I said that the lockdown hadn't even been announced when I was delivering the leaflets, he said that it didn't matter.

An uncle of mine informed me about Rebel News and their "Fight The Fines UK" campaign. I filled in the form on their website, not really expecting help, because I hadn't actually received a fine. I had a solicitor get in touch with me within a week, who was employed by Rebel News. They said it was an important case because it was a misuse of the legislation and involved freedom of speech. They took a statement from me, consulted a barrister and then wrote the letter that was sent to Essex police.

I then had a phone call from my solicitor on Saturday 19th December to say the CPN had been rescinded, and received the letter, including an apology from the police, later the following week. I cannot thank Rebel News enough. Like the Light Paper, they are reporting on the real issues and are helping the people standing up to the tyranny and lies.

The Covidian Totalitarian Cult

by CJ HOPKINS

One of the hallmarks of totalitarianism is mass conformity to a psychotic official narrative.

Not a regular official narrative, like the "Cold War" or the "War on Terror" narratives. A totally delusional official narrative that has little or no connection to reality and that is contradicted by a preponderance of facts.

Nazism and Stalinism are the classic examples, but the phenomenon is better observed in cults and other sub-cultural societal groups. Numerous examples will spring to mind: the Manson family, Jim Jones' People's Temple, the Church of Scientology, Heavens Gate, etc., each with its own psychotic official narrative: Helter Skelter, Christian Communism, Xenu and the Galactic Confederacy, and so on.

Looking in from the dominant culture (or back through time in the case of the Nazis), the delusional nature of these official narratives is glaringly obvious to most rational people. What many people fail to understand is that to those who fall prey to them (whether individual cult members or entire totalitarian societies) such narratives do not register as psychotic. On the contrary, they feel entirely normal. Everything in their social "reality" reifies and reaffirms the narrative, and anything that challenges or contradicts it is perceived as an existential threat.

These narratives are invariably paranoid, portraying the cult as threatened or persecuted by an evil enemy or antagonistic force which only unquestioning conformity to the cult's ideology can save its members from. It makes little difference whether this antagonist is mainstream culture, body thetans, counter-revolutionaries, jews, or a virus. The point is not the identity of the enemy. The point is the atmosphere of paranoia and hysteria the official narrative generates, which keeps the cult members (or the society) compliant.

In addition to being paranoid, these narratives are often internally inconsistent, illogical, and well, just completely ridiculous. This does not weaken them, as one might suspect. Actually, it increases their power, as it forces their adherents to attempt to reconcile their inconsistency and irrationality, and in many cases utter absurdity, in order to remain in good standing with the cult.

Such reconciliation is of course impossible, and causes the cult members' minds to short circuit and abandon any semblance of critical thinking, which is precisely what the cult leader wants.

Moreover, cult leaders will often radically change these narratives for no apparent reason, forcing their cult members to abruptly forswear (and often even denounce as 'heresy') the beliefs they had previously been forced to profess, and behave as if they had never believed them. This causes their minds to further short circuit, until they eventually give up even trying to think rationally, and just mindlessly parrot whatever nonsensical gibberish the cult leader fills their heads with.

Also, the cult leader's nonsensical gibberish is not as nonsensical as it may seem at first. Most of us, upon encountering such gibberish, assume that the cult leader is trying to communicate, and that something is very wrong with his brain. The cult leader isn't trying to communicate. He is trying to disorient and control the listener's mind. Listen to Charlie Manson "rapping." Not just to what he says, but how he says it. Note how he sprinkles bits of truth into his stream of free-associated nonsense, and his repetitive use of thought-terminating clichés, described by Robert J. Lifton as follows:

"The language of the totalist environment is characterized by the thought-terminating cliché. The most far-reaching and complex of human problems are compressed into brief, highly selective, definitive-sounding phrases, easily memorized and easily expressed. They become the start and finish of any ideological analysis." — Thought Reform and the Psychology of Totalism: A Study of "Brainwashing" in China, 1961.

If all this sounds familiar, good. Because the same techniques that most cult leaders use to control the minds of the members of their cults are used by totalitarian systems to control the minds of entire societies: Milieu Control, Loaded Language, Sacred Science, Demand for Purity, and other standard mind-control techniques. It can happen to pretty much any society, just as anyone can fall prey to a cult, given the right set of circumstances.

It is happening to most of our societies right now. An official narrative is being implemented. A totalitarian official narrative. A totally psychotic official narrative, no less delusional than that of the Nazis, or the Manson family, or any other cult.

Most people cannot see that it is happening, for the simple reason that it is happening to them. They are literally unable to recognize it. The human mind is extremely resilient and inventive when it is pushed past its limits.

Ask anyone who has struggled with psychosis or has taken too much LSD. We do not recognize when we are going insane. When reality falls apart completely, the mind will create a delusional narrative, which appears just as "real" as our normal reality, because even a delusion is better than the stark raving terror of utter chaos.

This is what totalitarians and cult leaders count on, and exploit to implant their narratives in our minds, and why actual initiation rituals (as opposed to purely symbolic rituals) begin by attacking the subject's mind with terror, pain, physical exhaustion, psychedelic drugs, or some other means of obliterating the subject's perception of reality.

Once that is achieved, and the subject's mind starts desperately trying to construct a new narrative to make sense out of the cognitive chaos and psychological trauma it is undergoing, it is relatively easy to "guide" that process and implant whatever narrative you want, assuming you have done your homework.

And this is why so many people — people who are able to easily recognize totalitarianism in cults and foreign countries — cannot perceive the totalitarianism that is taking shape now, right in front of their faces (or, rather, right inside their minds). Nor can they perceive the delusional nature of the official "Covid-19" narrative, no more than those in Nazi Germany were able to perceive how completely delusional their official "master race" narrative was. Such people are neither ignorant nor stupid. They have been successfully initiated into a cult, which is essentially what totalitarianism is, albeit on a societal scale.

Their initiation into the Covidian Cult began in January, when the medical authorities and corporate media turned on The Fear with projections of hundreds of millions of deaths and fake photos of people dropping dead in the streets. The psychological conditioning has continued for months.

The masses have been subjected to a constant stream of propaganda, manufactured hysteria, wild speculation, conflicting directives, exaggerations, lies, and tawdry theatrical effects. Lockdowns. Emergency field hospitals and morgues. The singing-dancing NHS staff. Death trucks. Overflowing ICUs. Dead covid babies. Manipulated statistics. Goon squads. Masks and all the rest of it, which does not matter in the least, not to the members of the Covidian Cult.

Facts do not matter to totalitarians and cult members. What matters is loyalty to the cult or the party.

Evidence-Free Mask Marauders Targeting The Exempt

by NIALL McCRAE

They're coming for us, warned Peter Hitchens. Covid fanaticism is reaching a new level of hysteria, with sceptics such as Toby Young and Emma Kenny relentlessly attacked on mainstream and social media.

A distinguishing feature is the mask, which lockdown zealots want to enforce everywhere but the home. Health academic Trisha Greenhalgh, for example, is urging runners and cyclists to cover their faces for the public good.

A bone of contention for the mask morality brigade is the legal exemption for people with physical or mental health conditions. The criteria are broad and subjective: stress or discomfort qualifies. Despite the occasional warnings from retailers, there is no need for medical certification. Furthermore, anyone (including a police officer) demanding personal details of illness or disability is infringing the Equality Act.

This is all very disrupting to the covid cause. Tory MP Simon Hoare was angered by actor Laurence Fox posting a photograph of himself with a mask exemption badge:

"I hadn't realised that being a first class, ocean going, chateau bottled, nuclear powered prick was an exemption from wearing a mask. What a selfish loathsome tool this man is." Society is being encouraged to treat free-faced citizens as antisocial germ-spreaders. But mask enforcement is a radical and disproportionate response to a disease of mortality risk similar to influenza, and is based on scant evidence. How did we get here?

As the covid-19 outbreak reached Britain, official guidance focused on social distancing and handwashing. In April deputy chief medical advisor Jonathan Van Tam asserted that masks were unnecessary for the general public. However, after the World Health Organisation recommended masks as one of several ways to reduce risk, on 15th June the government mandated masks on public transport, and then in September in shops.

Yet research shows that masks offer little protection. Indeed, manufacturers issue a disclaimer on the packaging. Droplet infection from coughing or spittle are preventable without reliance on masks, but aerosol particles are so minuscule that the mask defence is like wearing a string vest to stop mosquito bites.

Some studies supporting mask use have appeared during the pandemic, but the findings are dubious due to design flaws, peer review prone to group-think and a rush to publish. A Danish study producing results that clashed with the consensus was rejected for publication by three prominent journals. Henning Bundgaard and colleagues eventually published in the Annals of Internal Medicine. In their large population study, comprising 3030 surgical mask wearers and 2994 wearing no mask, 42 (1.8%) of the former and 53 (2.1%) of the latter caught covid-19, a statistically insignificant difference.

The Danish study has been ignored because it did not measure transmission. However, most countries have not reduced incidence of covid-19 after mandating masks. In the UK the rate has surged despite widespread use of masks indoors and outdoors.

In March last year, deputy chief medical officer Jenny Harries warned that masks could 'trap the virus', causing the person wearing to breathe in germs that might otherwise have passed by. In a 2015 study of masks to prevent flu, McIntyre and colleagues remarked that 'moisture retention, reuse of cloth masks and poor filtration may result in increased risk of infection'. Poor practice includes habitual face-touching and improper discarding of potentially contaminated masks. Masks are a concentrated source of disease and could increase transmission.

Instead of inciting a lynch mob mentality, perhaps covid zealots should do something about the used masks strewn on our pavements. On-the-spot fines, perhaps?

Governments Should Stop Being A Killing Joke

by TJ TATS

Jaz Coleman, enigmatic frontman of iconic post-punk band Killing Joke, has long been a spokesman for the awake, before it ever became fashionable to seek truth over narrative.

Formed in a house occupied by Tavistock Institute employees (indeed, one of these people gave the band its name), Killing Joke have always pushed back on the conventional conformist view of the world and sought to pull back the curtain and provide acerbic commentary on what 'they' are up to.

Dismissed in the past by the ignorant and the arrogant alike as being some kind of madman, Coleman has nonetheless continued his message of the dangers of the world we have created. His encyclopaedic knowledge is astonishing to behold, and segues between topics are done without missing a beat, punctuated by one of the most intense laughs I have ever encountered.

I opened by asking if he can shed any light on what the hell is going on, and his years of being a 'conspiracy theorist'

JC: "This term 'conspiracy theory'; an all-purpose metaphor for nullifying debate. Let's go back and have a look at the timeline of where we are today. The formation of the Council on Foreign Relations (1921) by Edward Mandell House was the precursor of the League of Nations, which ultimately became the United Nations. There are strange bodies connected to these institutions, all of which play a huge role in shaping strategy for the future structure of the world.

There are a number of documents that have been released or leaked that are examples of these groups' interference. The Global 2000 Report commissioned by and submitted to the Carter administration in 1980 was effectively a quantification of the population and this came to the conclusion that 5 billion of us would 'have to go', followed by a deafening silence! This shows the mindset of an elite that refer to the populous as disposable human material or indeed useless eaters. Mass dehumanisation is a major part of why we find ourselves where we are. Then of course, we have Operation Lockstep from 2010. Another is the 'Report from Iron Mountain on The Possibility and The Desirability of Peace', which states that in order for the current banking system [to continue], man should be in a perpetual state of challenge and war. This was of course dismissed as a hoax once leaked, but people can make up their own mind.

Denis Healey said "world events do not occur by accident. They are made to happen, whether it is to do with national issues or commerce; and most of them are staged and managed by those who hold the purse strings" and he would know, he was a founding member of the Bilderberger Group. Kurt Lewin of the Frankfurt School and later of the Tavistock Institute, theorised, amongst many other things, that a series of shocks would result in a 'blank slate' in which man reverts to a childlike state, which makes people malleable and easier to manipulate. Nobody's thoughts are their own today. The nanny state was a Tavistock term.

Then there is the US Air Force document 'Owning the Weather by 2025'. The chemtrail programme we see now that started in 1995 was a product of Bush Sr., Clinton even had to apologise for a minute fraction of the testing that has been done on the public, without their knowledge or consent, in some way or another since the 1930s. Why on Mount Shasta is there such an abnormally high level of barium in the soil? People need to take samples of soil from their own gardens and have it tested at independent laboratories to make sure there is nothing sinister in there. Even during this current 'pandemic', the heaviest 'covid casualties' are where the geo-engineering experiments are heaviest.

The Solar Radiation Management programme (or 'Teller's sunscreen'), which is one of 16 concurrent programmes, involves metallic substances being pumped into the upper atmosphere to ostensibly reflect poisonous UV rays back into space. If you put barium in the upper atmosphere and fluoride in the water, we have aluminium fluoride poisoning. The current chemtrail programme is 25 years in and is inextricably linked to transhumanism and altering the human genome – without question. Our earth is being terraformed with high altitude ionospheric aerosol. As for 'Space Weather' that Obama warned us of as his parting shot; every eleven years there is a solar cycle that affects behaviour patterns of insects, animals and humans and all become more aggressive. Imagine though, there is a huge solar storm. The satellites go out, no GPS and all the technology controlled from satellites on Earth fails... including anything in your body. GPS is set at magnetic north. It used to move 2cm per annum, it is now moving at 30 miles a year. People often speak of time seeming to go more quickly than in the past and that is due to the continued electrification of the earth.

The conversation turned to the infrastructure needed to monitor and control.

JC: "We are seeing forests of 5G towers replacing nature and creating a new digital flu. Forests are falling silent, created by these Neo-Prometheans, with no bees pollinating anything. But in the case of 5G, what goes up, must come down in my view! We have gone so far down the path of transhumanism, there is almost no going back. We may be the last of our species, of sapien sapien. We are being replaced by homo universalis, a fusion of man and machine, the splicing of human and insect genome via nano worm technologies. We have instances of Morgellons, with the fibrous material having numbers and symbols on the threads that are coming out of people's bodies. This means the technology is owned by somebody; which means YOU are owned by somebody. Of course, this infrastructure being implemented is needed to create a state of technological fascism; cultural enslavement by technetronic means. We are entering a world where non-conformists will be eliminated using technology as a weapon. Unless we act now to stop the encroachment of the technetronic system, which 5G epitomises, that is our future.

When cash is eventually eradicated, what do you think happens to the 12 million people that are homeless? They die of course, because they have no means to buy food. And then there is of course the ultimate form of control, the control of the food supply. When so many are starving, why are there rules and regulations created by the EU, for harmonised food standards across all member nations? The only reason to do this is to remove people's ability to provide their own food locally. Codex Alimentarius (a collection of standards, guidelines and codes of practice adopted by the Codex Alimentarius Commission (CAC) which is the central part of the joint FAO/WHO Food Standards Programme) itself has roots in Nazi Germany via Fritz ter Meer, board member of IG Farben group which included Bayer, who, amongst other things, manufactured Zyklon B (a cyanide based pesticide created in the 1920s). Monsanto (Bayer) now dominate the market in terms of seeds and crops that are self-germinating rather than being pollinated by bees, but can only be used once, meaning that people must buy them again year on year. It is no coincidence that Bayer was one of the 'unholy trinity' that made up IG Farben and now continues its legacy in GM foods, with nations being 'encouraged' to partake in this new form of agriculture. Biotech companies are already deploying 'food safety officers' to arrest those using heirloom seeds and claiming their patents have been stolen in order to position themselves as the sole source of the means by which food can be produced. Our food is irradiated, nutritionally reduced, mixed with toxic chemicals and the result is a sick population, and customers for Big Pharma."

So, is there any hope for the future?

JC: "We have to redress the balance. We have to embrace more localised ecosystems and permaculture, which Bill Mollinson (Australian biologist) had great ideas on. We need mass trans-nationalisation; systematic disengagement with the top Fortune 1000 companies; a neo-Bolshevik solution to the Central Banking problem. We cannot live in a state of capitalism or constant war, because when we have a military industrial complex that needs constant war in order to have perpetual growth, it is unsustainable. We need self-sufficiency, especially in food production; community instead of building high walls, the will to work. Everything will fragment and we will need each other to survive, all empires fail. We need the restructuring of religion to allow for a female deity through which we can facilitate our relationship with the earth and make us worthy custodians of the earth, not to rape and pillage it. Our community of earth colonies, rather than a fan club for Killing Joke, is one option for people wanting to live off the grid, another is the possibility of 'earthships'. Ultimately, you must avoid high populous areas, the so called 'smart cities' as they will be the kill zones. You don't have to live like termites in a mound, there is another way.

We need a responsible, philosophical elite with a moral compass able to make difficult discussions for the good of humanity. They do not exist in the upper echelons of corporations or amongst the richest in society. We have to completely transform our democratic system and have decision making based on the Galton theory of the Wisdom of Crowds. While man is in this corrupt state, he cannot be trusted. Governments should be like jury service; short period of work then you are out again, so there are no vested interests or corruption. We must ensure we have a pluralist media with a wide range of views rather than the whole industry controlled by six people. We should increase education and the variety and quality of education. All they teach is exam result focused subjects and are all STEM based because they want future e-workers to enslave the human race. They don't want the arts or musicians or people being together and that's why we have a war on the arts.

I have made it my goal and felt it my duty this year to speak out as much as possible. People need to wake up to the encroaching enslavement. I have had 42 years of ridicule and it's hard not to grin with satisfaction when all these things come to pass, but it's a hollow victory. I am the archetypal fool; I will talk about the things people don't want to talk about. I will continue to do so, until they shut me up. When that is? Couldn't give a fuck!

It is the duty of all citizens to make note of those perpetrating crimes against humanity and hold them to account. The idea the richest people are the ones who are smartest and should make decisions for humanity is nonsense.

Redemption comes from speaking out when you see evil. Those that don't speak out curse themselves. To those behind this plan for control, I am proud to say that I do not wear a mask and I am the enemy of you. I hate you for destroying the dreams, hopes and aspirations of all the beautiful people on earth. That's a big part of this 'pandemic' operation, lowering expectations. Many of these rich and powerful people make the mistake that oblivion follows death, but unfortunately for them, that's not the case. Consciousness transcends death. They will answer for their crimes, they will get theirs".

Murder Of The Innocent

by DR. VERNON COLEMAN
MB ChB DSc FRSA

The now almost entirely corrupt mass market media, led by the sexist, ageist, treacherous and traitorous BBC (now the official mouthpiece for fascist nutters, communitarianism and Agenda 21) has spent much of the last year showing us photos of people who allegedly died of covid-19.

Most of them died of something else, of course.

The entirely absurd and grotesquely unscientific ploy of claiming that anyone who died within 28 or 60 days of a positive PCR test must have died of covid-19, means that around the world hundreds of thousands who died of undiagnosed or untreated cancer or heart disease were wrongly added to the false total constantly promoted by sick politicians, corrupt advisors and sycophantic journalists (who, let us never forget, deliberately avoid interviewing anyone, however qualified, who might have been able to produce facts that didn't fit well into the Great Lie).

As a corollary, it will have probably not escaped your notice that there has been virtually no flu anywhere in the world for a long time now.

In an average sort of year, there are around a billion cases of flu every season (considerably more than the total to which they've managed to manipulate the number of covid-19 cases) but in 2020, the WHO recorded no cases of flu whatsoever in Central America or South America, sporadic cases in India and a smattering of cases in some countries in the Northern Hemisphere. You'd have to be suffering from a severe shortage of brain tissue not to see a pattern here.

Inevitably, however, all the flu victims were added to the covid-19 death total.

It's difficult to be precise, because of all the lies which have been told by the Government, but I am willing to bet a reputation built up over half a century (take a look at my website for a collection of some of my accurate forecasts, assessments and warnings over the years) that the number of deaths listed as covid-19 deaths consists of two groups: the number who would have normally died of the flu and the people who have died because of the lockdowns, the closure of many hospital departments and the effective absence, in many areas, of any real medical care.

To be precise, I believe that covid-19 has been carefully marketed for a specific purpose. It is similar in many ways to the ordinary flu. The mortality rate of covid-19 is much the same as the mortality rate associated with the flu – though worldwide the number of people affected by it is considerably less than would be expected in a normal year.

The flu can, and does, kill 650,000 people in a six month flu season. It is claimed that covid-19 has killed two million people in around 15 months. It isn't difficult to do the maths and see how much of a fraud this is.

And here's a prediction: in 2021 there will be notably more deaths than there are in an average sort of year.

Some of the people who die will die of the flu virus known as covid-19, or of some mutation of it. Whatever it is called and wherever it comes from, the flu kills a good many people every year.

Then there will be the thousands who will die of bacterial pneumonia – caused by the masks they've been wearing for hour after hour and day after day. There is already an epidemic of bacterial pneumonia deaths caused by mask wearing. It's going to get a good deal worse. And it will, inevitably, be a while before the average doctor wakes up, does a little research and cottons on to the link between masks and pneumonia.

And there will be many thousands of deaths caused by the vaccine. The manipulative politicians and their wretched advisors will try to claim that deaths after vaccination are coincidental. That's like claiming that it's just a coincidence if someone gets drunk, crashes a car and dies.

The experimental covid-19 vaccine (and yes, I know there is a strong argument that it shouldn't really be called a vaccine but let's concentrate on the big stuff here) is dangerous. It has already killed a lot of people and it's going to kill a good many more. I've had a bet that by the end of 2021 more of us will know someone who was made seriously ill or killed by the vaccine than someone who was killed by covid-19. I am constantly sickened by celebrities who are wheeled out to claim the vaccine is `safe', without knowing anything about it. The Archbishop of Canterbury seemed to join the queue of celebrities airing their ignorance when he allegedly told the BBC that the vaccine was safe.

But most of this year's deaths, and next year's deaths too, will be a direct result of the lockdowns. And since the lockdowns and hospital department closures have all been unnecessary and deliberate, I have no qualms about describing these deaths as murders. None of these deaths was accidental or a surprise. I take no pride in the fact that I repeatedly warned back in the spring of 2020 that there would be more deaths caused by the lockdowns than the coronavirus.

During the first lockdown, cancer referrals fell by 75% and breast cancer diagnosis fell by over 50%. Cancer didn't go away. Doctors just stopped bothering to diagnose it. Deaths from bowel cancer, prostate cancer, diabetes and many other diseases doubled in the first six months of the lockdowns and closures. Most, if not all, were put down as `covid-19' deaths because anyone who had a test and died afterwards was a covid-19 death. Suicides rose dramatically – probably quadrupling.

Since the BBC in particular and the media in general spent much of 2020 showing us photos of people who allegedly died of covid-19, I want to devote a few words to those who died unnecessarily because hospital departments were closed or because the lockdowns filled them with unbearable despair. These people need remembering too. Let this be their Remembrance Day. They were killed by the UK government and the NHS just as surely as the soldiers we remember on Remembrance Day in November were killed by our enemies.

A disabled man in south London starved to death because he obeyed the government's message that he stay at home.

Sherwin Hall was just 27-years-old when he died. He visited a hospital in Leeds in March 2020 complaining of pain. He visited the hospital 14 times in four weeks but it wasn't until the end of May that he was given the scan for which he had begged.

Daniel Furniss, who was 34, killed himself because he couldn't cope with the isolation. Emily Owen, who was 19, killed herself for the same reason. And so did 14-year-old Sam Tyler. Kian Southway was 15 when he died. Corey Liversedge was 16 when he committed suicide because of the lockdown. Beth Palmer was 17 when she killed herself. Matthew Mackell was 17 when he killed himself.

Dorothy Ashworth refused medication, food and fluids and she died of despair in a care home. Coronavirus restrictions meant that she thought her family had abandoned her.

This hasn't just been happening in the UK, of course. I have details of people all around the world who killed themselves. In India, 66 children committed suicide within 100 days of the covid-19 lockdown. If there is a pandemic of anything it's a pandemic of suicide.

In Adelaide, Australia four newborn babies died after being denied transport to a hospital where they could have had life-saving heart surgery. They were denied transport because of covid-19 lockdown restrictions.

There were, of course, thousands more who died unnecessarily because of the wicked, stupid, pointless and eternally damaging lockdowns.

My heart goes out to all those people who have lost relatives and friends as a result of this war on mankind. Most of the deaths allegedly caused by covid-19 were caused by the inappropriate treatment devised by the Government and delivered by the NHS.

They were killed, in cold blood, by the Government and the NHS.

Smart Technology: Is It As Safe As We're Told?

Matt Hancock MP memorably stated "we are fighting against an invisible enemy…" He was referring to the coronavirus but is it possible that 'electrosmog', something we cannot see, but that permeates our environment 24/7, could be having serious effects on our health?

by MATTHEW REYNOLDS

(EMF) radiation from wireless technology is now ubiquitous in our modern world.

Eminent international scientists have persistently stated concerns, documenting and listing the effects of EMF on human health. Numerous peer-reviewed scientific studies indicate links between radio-frequency radiation (RFR) and rising levels of modern illnesses, including cancer and various neurological disorders.

On February 4th 2020, Public Health England (PHE) updated their guidelines but only on mobile phone safety. Their recent advice, especially to children, is to keep phones away from the body and to text rather than call; they even refer to former UK Chief Medical Officer, Sir William Stewart, who has been warning of the risk to health from RFR since 1999.

Within mobile phones themselves there are safety warnings hidden away in the settings' legal information but how many people are aware of that?

Campaigners accept that this is one step in the right direction but it is still inadequate to protect populations from escalating levels of RFR. Two recent multi-million dollar studies, from the US and Italy, show 'clear evidence' of a link between RFR and tumours.

The World Health Organisation (WHO), whose stance focuses only on heating effects from mobile devices, completely miss the point of what is happening in our everyday environment.

Independent international experts say that the increasing emissions from phone masts, as well as the addition of many small-cell antennae as used in Fifth Generation technology (5G), are a serious health hazard. They expose us to low-intensity i.e. non-thermal levels of RFR. "It is well known that weak RFR could cause all sorts of dramatic non-thermal effects in body cells, tissues and organs."

Whilst there is less body penetration from higher millimetre wave frequencies, any penetration into the body is a serious matter when there are proven adverse effects to vulnerable soft tissue; the testes, sweat glands, peripheral nervous system, immune and cardiovascular systems.

As the UK 'guidelines' do not cover either long-term exposure nor the above-noted low-intensity effects, they are inadequate to protect public health.

Furthermore, the 2018 European Commission Scientific Committee on Health, Environmental and Emerging Risks (SHEER) lists 5G electromagnetic radiation as an emerging risk to public and environmental health.

Vested Interests?

Should we be asking why successive UK governments choose to accept radiation levels set by a small, private group, the International Commission on Non-Ionising Radiation Protection (ICNIRP)? Its guidance has varied little since 1998.

ICNIRP continues to the present day to make the same assertions, in spite of growing scientific evidence to the contrary. Moreover, it appears that the regulators have deliberately excluded the scientific evidence of harm; their hypothesis that any dangers would only result from thermal effects is at best out of date. ICNIRP have been repeatedly exposed as having ties to the telecom industry.

Meanwhile, Lloyds of London "exclude any liability coverage for claims, directly or indirectly arising out of, resulting from or contributed to by electromagnetic fields, electromagnetic radiation, electromagnetism, radio waves or noise".

Is the desire for profit blinding decision makers to the true facts? In the opinions of many publications that give clear evidence of industry capture, it is.

History repeating itself?

In the 1930s scientists were aware that asbestos caused cancer and many companies were aware of the connection between asbestos and cancer. However, as late as the 1970s, household products made of asbestos continued to be sold and, tragically, research was altered to hide these findings from the public.

Is the asbestos story repeating itself, with companies avoiding facing the truth about the threats caused to human, animal and plant life caused by EMRs, especially 5G?

What Action is Being Taken?

Legal cases that identify harm are being won and some of the facts are being recognised by governments.

On December 20th 2020 a Dutch Court ruled that an increase in health risks cannot be ruled out even at exposures of 1 V/m, which is well below the government's "safety" ICNIRP guidelines.

Similarly, the Court of Turin has found ICNIRP cannot be trusted. The Brussels Environment Minister declared last year that she would not allow her citizens to be 'guinea pigs' to an untested technology and Switzerland has placed an indefinite moratorium on 5G due to health concerns as a precautionary measure.

Increasing numbers of concerned citizens across the world are lobbying their local governments and with some success. Installing 5G's untested beam-forming technology, without consent is a clear violation of human rights.

Any Successes?

Activists have stopped 56, 5G masts in Bristol and London, although not on the grounds of pollution, only on visual and technical matters. Wells in Somerset and eight other towns across the South West voted against 5G. "This Council has a responsibility to protect the public and environment from exposure to harm, albeit unpredictable in the current state of scientific knowledge, and therefore opposes the roll-out of 5G in the Parish of Wells City Council – based on the Precautionary principle – until further information is revealed."

Experts raising the alarm include Frank Clegg, former CEO of Microsoft in Canada and the highly respected scientists and medical doctors who have called for a moratorium on the rollout of 5G. "We, the undersigned scientists, recommend a moratorium on the roll-out of the fifth generation, 5G, for telecommunication until potential hazards for human health and the environment have been fully investigated by scientists independent from industry. 5G will substantially increase exposure to radio-frequency electromagnetic fields (RF-EMF) on top of the 2G, 3G, 4G, WiFi etc. for telecommunications already in place. RF-EMF has been proven to be harmful for humans and the environment." (5gappeal.eu)

The 2018 European Electronics Code now transposed into UK law requires competent authorities to reconcile the health and environmental risks; Matt Hancock has yet to establish who they are.

Court action is being pursued by www.actionagainst5g.org led by Michael Mansfield QC. This case is very much needed as 5G masts are currently being erected at speed in the UK. The government is failing to act on the evidence and is ignoring public opposition.

Horror Author Axed

Author Joseph D'Lacey's forthcoming novel Weed has been withdrawn and the contract cancelled in a dispute over the author's personal views on current affairs. The publisher made the following statement:

"Horrific Tales Publishing will no longer be publishing Weed by Joseph D'Lacey and have withdrawn both Weed and The Veil: Testaments I and II from sale with immediate effect.

Any pre-orders will be refunded through the original vendors.

by BEN JONES

Horrific Tales Publishing neither condones nor accepts the views that the author has posted on social media and in all conscience cannot allow the company to be associated with them."

D'Lacey, who questions MSM reporting on the pandemic and many other current issues on his blog, was circumspect: "It's a shock, of course, but the rights have returned to me which means I can publish the novel myself or resell it."

Censorship of authors is nothing new. However, such restrictions have historically applied to the books themselves rather than their writers.

When asked if he felt freedom of speech outside fiction was also now under attack, D'Lacey stated: "The worst thing about this is the widening chasm it reveals between two elements of society; the open-minded and the closed-minded. The mass media is a psy-weapon, bludgeoning us with information terror 24/7/365.

This creates a perverse addiction in the MSM's audience. It should come as no surprise that people are triggered when you put their fix under the microscope.

I've even seen reviewers withdrawing their ratings of Weed, as though their role is to punish me for my opinions, rather than the critique the work itself."

This story may have a happy ending, as other publishers watching the situation have already been in touch with D'Lacey, offering the possibility of new outlets for the novel.

Operation Paperclip

The German scientists, technicians and engineers had made brilliant and groundbreaking advances in many fields in the lead up to and during the war, and the victors didn't have a moral problem with the Nazi weapons of destruction… the only problem was that the brilliant scientists were on the wrong side. The US got a sizeable portion of these Nazi scientists (around 1500) and smuggled them into NASA, the CIa and Hollywood, where some of them such as Wernher von Braun went on to make a name for themselves. Thus, the US willingly allowed its military and intelligence agencies to be infected with Nazi ideology, which continues to this day.

Operation Gladio

The two-decade operation used CIA-created 'stay behind' networks as part of a 'Strategy of Tension' that unleashed a multitude of terrorist attacks from the late 1960s to the early 1980s. The attacks were blamed on marxists and other left-wing political opponents in order to discredit communism. The operation involved multiple bombings that killed hundreds of innocent people, including children. The most notable attack was the August 2, 1980 bombing of the Bologna train station, which killed 85 people.

COINTEL PRO

A program run by the FBI under Hoover which started in 1956. CoIntelPro was a series of undercover operations that targeted people and groups the US Government deemed were a problem, such as the communist party, other far left groups, civil rights groups, far right groups (e.g. the KKK) and individual activists such as Martin Luther King. The scope of CoIntelPro was broad: it involved monitoring, surveilling, infiltrating, discrediting and disrupting. Although then Attorney General Robert Kennedy authorised some spying, the FBI was given an inch and took a mile (much like today's spy agencies), clearly overstepping the bounds of legality. It became a way for the government to intimidate and stifle dissidents.

Operation Mockingbird

Operation Mockingbird was a CIA project to infiltrate and covertly control the media. It began in the 1950s under then CIA director Allen Dulles. The declassified files (most are classified and secret, but a tiny fraction here) show how the CIA infiltrated the mainstream media and had its pieces inserted into TV, newspapers and journals everywhere as "news" when they were nothing more than lies and propaganda. Richard Salant, former President of CBS News, once said that "our job is to give people not what they want, but what we decide they ought to have." Mockingbird was famously exposed in the 1975 Church Committee hearings Nothing much has changed today. Journalists worldwide are still on the payroll, and some were brave enough to talk about it, such as the late Udo Ulfkotte.

1962

Operation Northwoods

The 1962 declassified US Joint Chiefs of Staff Memo was entitled "Operation Northwoods – Justification for US Military Intervention in Cuba." In its own words, the document states that a "series of well coordinated incidents will be planned to take place in and around Guantanamo to give genuine appearance of being done by hostile Cuban forces." Luckily JFK had the wisdom to reject the plan; by 1962 he had discerned the insidious influence of the Military Intelligence Complex upon his presidency.

The false flag which dominates the modern era. Without getting bogged down in the purposely-convoluted compl and many plots and subplots, the results of this operation clear: the invasion and destruction of Iraq, despite no evi at all of any connection, and the heightened security and removal of civil liberties domestically that followed and u which we now all live every day.
Those who still believe the official story despite the facts, litany of media spin and government cover-ups have simp not watched James Corbett's '9/11: A Conspiracy Theory

Gulf of Tonkin

The most notorious declassfied false flag in American history. It resulted in the deaths of millions of people. Declassified documents reveal the North Vietnamese did not attack the United States on August 4, 1964. In fact, the CIA, through its South Vietnamese proxy, invaded North Vietnam and the standoff in the Gulf of Tonkin was a result of those illegal covert raids conducted under OPLAN 34A. President Lyndon Johnson's Secretary of State, Robert McNamara, lied to a joint session of the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services committees about the role played by the Navy in the phantom attacks. Declassified documents also reveal a number of senators knew the incident in the Gulf of Tonkin was a false flag.

3, the CIA launched Operation Ajax in order to overthrow Iran's cratically elected leader, Mohammed Mosaddiq, and replace him he Shah, a ruthless dictator. The United States sought to depose nationalized Anglo-Persian oil company and install 5 U.S. oil nies to take over the nation's oil fields. In order to do so, they a false flag operation that utilized propaganda and complex al manoeuvres in order to create public revolt that eventually the United States and Britain's MI6 military intelligence talling the Shah in order to throttle Iran's oil supplies and orm the nation into a puppet regime of the United States .

Lavon Affair

srael admits that an Israeli terrorist cell operating in Egypt planted bombs n several buildings, including U.S. diplomatic facilities, then left behind evidence" implicating 8 Arabs as the culprits. One of the bombs detonated prematurely, which caused one of the bombers to be captured. A public trial exposed the Israeli spy ring and the covert operation. The operatives were convicted and two of them executed. Israeli Defense Minister Pinhas Lavon was forced to step down because of the scandal. However, the more far-reaching consequences of the Lavon Affair demonstrate once again how governments use false flags to achieve certain objectives that might not have been possible otherwise.

Operation Lockstep: Covid-19

The insane reposnse of governments to the as-yet-to-be-wholly-isolated-from-an-infected-person pathogen is responsible for yet further massive loss of liberties and the ability to work and provide for one's family across the world. The latest in a long line of establishment scams, deceptions and terror perpetrated on an unsuspecting public through the power of the media machine and the lockstepping of all world governments.

Syria Fake Chemical Attacks

In 2013, to try and justify launching bombing attacks in support of the rebel alliance fighting with Al-Nusra and Al-Qaeda against President Assad of Syria, the media and especially the BBC faked a hospital supposedly receiving children with injuries from gas attacks. Videos exposing the hoax circulated widely on the internet and a massive public backlash resulted in Prime Minister David Cameron's being defeated in the House of Commons when asking for air strikes on August 29th. The regime waited a year and did it anyway via supporting U.S strikes supposedly on terrorists in Iraq and Syria. Russian military involvement saved Syria on that occasion.

Fake Anthrax Attacks

Although the FBI now admits that the 2001 anthrax attacks were carried out by one or more U.S. government scientists, a senior FBI official says that the FBI was actually told to blame the Anthrax attacks on Al Qaeda by White House officials (remember what the anthrax letters looked like). Government officials also confirm that the White House tried to link the anthrax to Iraq to support the false 9/11 justification for 'regime change' in that country.

German Court Declares Lockdown Measures Unconstitutional

from 2020NEWS.DE translated by 'NORTHUMBRIAN NOMAD'

A district judge in Weimar has acquitted a man ordered to pay a fine for breaching the covid contact ban by celebrating his birthday with at least seven other participants from a total of eight households – six guests too many, according to the Thuringia covid regulation.

The judge's verdict is damning: the covid regulation is in breach of the constitution and can be appealed against in material law. This is the first time a judge has engaged intensively with the medical facts, economic consequences and effects of specific policies.

Part of the Rechtstaat Principle, the principle of the state acting in accordance with the rule of law, is the imperative of precision in legislation. Laws cannot simply impose across-the-board regulations, thereby affording authorities licence to act according to whim, which would amount to arbitrary rule.

According to the Federal Infection Protection Act (IPA), the "relevant authorities" are to impose "the requisite safety measures". In normal times, this means that spreaders or persons suspected of spreading an infection may be isolated, or contaminated areas closed off.

The IPA does not envisage a general ban on contact also extending to healthy people. However – and this is the interpretation made by many administrative courts so far – it may be permissible to go beyond the purview of the IPA in the case of an "unprecedented event" that was so new that the legislator would have been unable to pass the necessary regulations in advance.

The judge rejects this pretext. As early as 2013, the Bundestag had access to a risk analysis conducted with the participation of the Robert Koch Institute, concerning a pandemic caused by a "SARS-type virus", which described a scenario of 7.5 million dead in Germany over a period of three years, and discussed anti-epidemic measures during such a pandemic (Bundestag publication 17/12051). The legislator was therefore able, in regard to such an event that was considered at least "conditionally probable" (occurrence probability class C), to study the provisions of the IPA and if necessary adjust them.

This political failure, as a result of which Germany went into the pandemic virtually unprepared – without legal instruments governing control of the virus, without stocks of masks, PPE and medical equipment – cannot now lead to politicians' simply closing a gap in legislation as they see fit.

Particularly given that an epidemic situation, i.e., the basis for the expansion of the routine infection protection provisions, simply does not exist (or no longer exists). The numbers of those infected and showing symptoms were already falling in the spring (way back in 2020!) The lockdown thus came late and was generally ineffective.

At no time, therefore, has there been a concrete danger of the health service's being overwhelmed by a 'wave' of covid-19 patients.

As can be seen from the DIVI ICU register newly established on March 17th 2020, an average of at least 40% ICU beds in Germany were free at all times. In Thuringia, 378 beds were registered occupied on April 3rd, 36 of these with covid-19 patients. Meanwhile there were 417 beds vacant.

On April 16th, two days before the issuance of the regulation, 501 beds were registered occupied, 56 with covid-19 patients, and 528 beds were vacant… Thuringia registered its highest number of notified covid-19 patients in spring at 63 (on April 28th). Thus, at no time did the number of covid-19 patients reach a level that could have justified fears of the healthcare system's being overwhelmed.

This estimate of the actual dangers from covid-19 in the spring of 2020 is confirmed by an evaluation of settlement data from 421 clinics belonging to Initiative Qualitätsmedizin, which found that the number of SARI cases (severe acute respiratory infection) treated as in-patients in Germany in the first half of 2020 was 187,174 – lower than the figure for the first half of 2019 (221,841 cases), even though this figure included those SARI cases caused by covid. The same analysis showed the numbers of ICU and respirator cases lower in the first half of 2020 than in 2019.

The judge concluded that there were no "unacceptable gaps in protection" that could have justified recourse to across-the-board regulations against the Federal Government. It is striking how coldly the Weimar judge concluded the months-long discussion:

"A general ban on contacts is a severe intervention on civic rights. It is among the fundamental liberties of the individual in a free society to determine for himself or herself with whom (on presumption of consent) and under what circumstances he or she will make contact. Free encounter among people for all imaginable purposes is also a fundamental basis for society. The obligation of the state here is categorically to refrain from all intervention that purposefully regulates and limits this. Questions of how many people a citizen may invite to his home or how many people a citizen may meet in a public place to go for a walk, play sports, shop or sit on a park bench are categorically of no legitimate interest to the state."

Much of the public has now almost come to terms with the new abnormal. However, as the judge points out, the life that was previously considered 'normal' has now been reinterpreted as a crime.

"Although it appears that a shift in values has taken place over the months of the covid crisis, with the consequence that many people find procedures that were formerly considered absolutely exceptional more or less 'normal' – which of course also alters perspectives on the constitution – there should be no doubt that by imposing a general ban on contacts, the democratic Rechtsstaat has broken what was previously seen as a self-evident taboo.

"It must also be noted – as an aspect worthy of special consideration – that the state, in imposing its general ban on contacts with the aim of protection against infection, treats every citizen as a potential threat to the health of third parties.

If every citizen is seen as a threat from which others must be protected, that citizen is also robbed of the possibility of deciding what risks to take – which is a fundamental freedom. A citizen's choice of visiting a cafe or a bar in the evening and running the risk of a respiratory infection for the sake of social interaction and pleasure in life, or of exercising caution because she has a weakened immune system and therefore prefers to stay at home, is removed under the provisions of a general ban on contacts."

India's Uprising Against The Globalist Food Takeover

by YOGEETA MISTRY

National and international media have been heavily censoring what is now being known as the largest peaceful protest in the history of humanity, which started on November 26, 2020 in India.

A staggering 250,000,000 people from various industry sectors stood together in a united workers strike, approximately 20% of India's population. To put that figure into perspective, that's almost four times the population of the U.K. and 75% of the U.S. population.

The strike action was in response to the nefarious farm bills surreptitiously passed on 23 September 2020, without debate, during India's brutal lockdown, in an attempt to pressure the Modi government to repeal the bills. The superficially benevolent bills threaten domestic and international food sovereignty, the livelihood of farmers and accelerate the globalist takeover of the food supply, inextricably linked with Agenda 21 and the UN's Sustainable Development Goals.

The one-day stand-off has snowballed into what is now one of the largest people's uprisings ever seen on earth.

Massive 'insta-city' encampments have formed at Singhu, Tikri and Ghazipur borders into Delhi, the main protest sites, with an estimated 345,000 farmers and protesters currently encamped–eating, sleeping, washing, praying–in what is now the winter season with evening temperatures dipping to around zero degrees.

With roads and highways completely blocked going into the capital, farmers and cross-industry sector protesters are standing in absolute unity and solidarity, from teachers unions to lawyers unions, Sikhs, Hindus and Muslims alike, fighting for their lives and their livelihood. And it's growing.

Thousands more, each day, from all over India, march towards the capital, in solidarity with the Farmers Protests to force the Indian PM to repeal these nefarious Acts. The farmers have vowed to stay for as long as it takes for the laws to be repealed, several months, even years. Forty have tragically lost their lives so far, including counts of suicide.

India, the world's largest democracy, is currently one month into this unprecedented people's uprising and alliance around a single issue. In total, it is estimated that there are around 2 million people actively involved around India in protests against the government, to save the country and the constitution.

None of the 500 farmers' unions were consulted in the passing of the bills, important stakeholders in the policy making decisions. All 500 unions are unanimously standing together in opposition to these farm bills. There have been six rounds of talks with farmer union leaders so far but these talks have been fruitless.

The Farm Bills at a glance and what they mean in real terms:

1. Farmers' Produce Trade and Commerce (Promotion and Facilitation) Act, 2020

2. Farmers (Empowerment and Protection) Agreement of Price Assurance

3. Farm Services Act, 2020, and the Essential Commodities (Amendment) Act 2020

Superficially, these seemingly benevolent laws aim to modernise and liberalise India's agricultural industry. But they have a nefarious underbelly.

Realistically, it will put the power into the hands of large corporations with zero allowance for court intervention to protect any violation of contracts and farmer's rights. They are essentially draconian bills to nourish billionaires under the guise of farmer welfare, which will eventually give corporations a complete monopoly on trade and agricultural produce, extinguishing farmer's Minimum Support Price (M.S.P.) to further impoverish them, which could lead to increase in farmer suicide as well as driving them off their land.

In short these laws will give corporations the power to stockpile, create scarcity and drive prices, to buy low and sell high, potentially leaving ordinary people to struggle with everyday kitchen economics and increasing food poverty, to control land usage and dictate crop cultivation for export, at the exclusion of the domestic market and hold all the bargaining power with peasant farmers.

Monsanto's absolute control over seed and imposition of GMO crop pan-India will impoverish farmers furthermore.

However, the ultimate goal is to displace 400,000,000 from rural areas in India into smart cities. Make no mistake: these bills are integral to the globalist's Agenda 21 strategy and the Sustainable Development Goals they want in place by 2030: for land and food acquisition and the elimination of SMEs of any description, with the populous being beholden to megalithic, monopolistic corporations, same as everywhere else on earth.

In response to counter the fake news, censorship and an excessively pro-government media narrative, Navkiran Natt a young dentist and youth activist has co-founded Trolley Times, an independent 'truth paper', its name derived from the trolley: essentially the trailer of the tractor which farmers are currently encamped in, their makeshift homes for the duration of the protest. Navrikan is currently encamped at Tikri and is the "voice of the protest from the protest". It is becoming one of the fastest growing publications in India.

How the world reacts to these protests is instrumental for all of our futures. India is blazing an inspirational trail for other countries to follow suit in protecting worker's rights, food security and rising up in the face of tyranny.

Twitter Refused To Remove Child Porn Videos Despite Repeated Requests By Trafficking Victim

A lawsuit filed in the Northern District of California, Wednesday 20th January by the victim and his mother, alleges Twitter made money off the clips, which showed a 13-year-old engaged in sex acts and are a form of child sexual abuse material, or child porn, the suit states.

According to the New York Post: 'The child - who is now 17 and lives in Florida - is identified only as John Doe and was between 13 and 14 years old when sex traffickers, posing as a 16-year-old female classmate, started chatting with him on Snapchat, the suit alleges.

Doe and the traffickers allegedly exchanged nude photos before the conversation turned to blackmail: If he didn't share more sexually graphic photos and videos, the explicit material he'd already sent would be shared with his "parents, coach, pastor" and others.

Doe, acting under duress, initially complied and sent videos of himself performing sex acts and was also told to include another child in his videos, which he did, the suit claims.

Eventually, Doe blocked the traffickers and they stopped harassing him, but at some point in 2019, the videos surfaced on Twitter under two accounts that were known to share child sexual abuse material, court papers allege. Over the next month, the videos would be reported to Twitter at least three times — first on Dec. 25, 2019 — but the tech giant failed to do anything about it until a federal law enforcement officer got involved, the suit states.

Doe became aware of the tweets in January 2020 because they'd been viewed widely by his classmates, which subjected him to "teasing, harassment, vicious bullying" and led him to become "suicidal," court records show.

While Doe's parents contacted the school and made police reports, he filed a complaint with Twitter, saying there were two tweets depicting child pornography of himself and they needed to be removed because they were illegal, harmful and were in violation of the site's policies.

A support agent followed up and asked for a copy of Doe's ID so they could prove it was him and after the teen complied, there was no response for a week, the family claims.

Around the same time, Doe's mother filed two complaints to Twitter reporting the same material, but she also received no response.

Twitter eventually replied on January 28th and said they wouldn't be taking down the material, which had already had over 167,000 views and 2,223 retweets, the suit states.

"Thanks for reaching out. We've reviewed the content, and didn't find a violation of our policies, so no action will be taken at this time," the response reads, according to the lawsuit.

In his response, published in the complaint, Doe was shocked. "What do you mean you don't see a problem? We both are minors right now and were minors at the time these videos were taken. We both were 13 years of age. We were baited, harassed, and threatened to take these videos that are now being posted without our permission. We did not authorize these videos AT ALL and they need to be taken down."

He even included his case number from a local law enforcement agency, but still the tech giant allegedly ignored him and refused to do anything about the illegal child sexual abuse material — as it continued to rack up more and more views.

Two days later, Doe's mother was connected with an agent from the Department of Homeland Security through a mutual contact, who then successfully had the videos removed on Jan. 30 2020.

"Only after this take-down demand from a federal agent did Twitter suspend the user accounts that were distributing the abusive material and report it to the National Center on Missing and Exploited Children," states the suit, filed by the Center and two law firms.

"This is directly in contrast to what their automated reply message and User Agreement state they will do to protect children."

The disturbing lawsuit goes on to allege Twitter knowingly hosts perverts who use the platform to exchange child pornographic material and profits from it by including advertisements interspersed between tweets advertising or requesting the material.'

What Can We Learn From China's Social Credit System?

China's Social Credit System, which ranks people on their behaviour, sees millions blacklisted and blocked from travelling each month because of outstanding debts and petty crimes.

by LOUIZE SMALL

People are named and shamed on public screens for receiving fines or acting out of line. Many Chinese citizens don't see it as surveillance; they see it as a way of increasing honesty, security and convenience, even if it is at the expense of their privacy.

Facial recognition technology catches citizens breaching regulations and immediately deducts a fine from their bank balance. It is largely accepted because people trust the government and enjoy perks for good behaviour. China suffers with social trust issues and the public seem reassured that the system will encourage greater responsibility and better etiquette.

There are many small schemes, both government and private, which make up the whole and cover every aspect of conduct. People are judged on criteria such as wealth, security, compliance, social connections and consumption behaviour. The more you buy, the better you do. If your friends are well-behaved, you will fare well too. As long as you comply, there is no need to worry.

This hasn't happened overnight. China's Social Credit System was first announced in 2014 and was due for full implementation by 2020. With all the restrictions and enhanced police power last year, surely it has been easier to remove rights, force compliance and introduce radical changes to social systems worldwide.

2020 showed us the overbearing power of the government and the media. We have been pitted, baited and trapped. Freedom of speech has been eroded online by censorship and 'fact-checking', and offline by police crackdowns on any protest, march or public opposition. Stealth tactics edge us closer to what looks and feels like the Social Credit System. How far are we in Britain away from sanctions and rewards? We are already following arrows and standing on spots.

Friends and family members obediently surrendered to Christmas restrictions without so much as a tentative enquiry into logic and facts. The masses are outsourcing their minds to the 'great and powerful' government, and those giving their orders. We are told 'it's not about you' in an underhanded attempt to corral the masses into 'group-think' mentality. We are sheep to be herded and we must act for 'the greater good'. The individual is no longer permitted. To think for yourself is selfish and criminal in their twisted view of the world.

For the best part of a year we have been stealthily primed for acquiescence. There are over 200 new laws, rules and regulations that have been imposed since March. We have surrendered our rights under the cover of a health emergency and now behave like automatons on the conveyor belt of compliance. Some cower and panic while others carry on as normal, defiant and oppositional. We see division, censorship and paranoia everywhere we go.

Do we want a Social Credit System in our country? No, we don't! But it seems that some now wouldn't oppose it. Many are firmly under the spell of the mainstream media propaganda machine, convinced that the only way to secure a safe and 'germ-free' future is to introduce further control strategies. Free-breathers are challenged, not by the government but by scornful fellow citizens who pompously believe they're doing their bit. Those who protest are blamed for new spikes in cases even though evidence is non-existent. There is a growing disdain for those who refuse to follow the rules, even though the rules make very little sense when scrutinised. The public have been well and truly turned against each other.

But in truth we've been publicly analysed for years. Store cards, credit scores and loyalty schemes have been around for a while and we all like, love and rate each other on Facebook, eBay and Uber without thought to whether we're being monitored. The Internet is a mass surveillance system and businesses can buy our really useful data already.

What's so wrong with a Social Credit System? Aside from the obvious invasion of privacy, the system is open to corruption and bribery and it clearly favours those who are wealthy already. Being able to make a donation to improve your assessment makes a mockery of a scheme that purports to encourage fairness. It promotes consumerism and greed as people score points for shopping and spending money. It is the gamification of society.

Anyone who has seen the Black Mirror episode 'Nosedive' will understand the stress involved in such a suffocating, superficial existence. Just one off day could cause a catastrophic downfall. Self-censorship would be rife and we would quickly become miserable facsimiles of our former selves, scared to put a foot wrong for fear of public humiliation.

Those spending more than four hours a day streaming television, films and gaming would suffer penalties. Criticising the government on social media would see you downgraded. Disobeying traffic laws, being bad with money and paying bills late would result in fines, embarrassment and inconvenience. According to research done by ABC Finance, 40% of us would have a bad social credit score by Chinese standards.

The truth is, most people are good and when they're not, it's usually due to innocent mistakes or preventable circumstances. Could we justify such a controlled, collectivised society in this country? I'm not sure we need one but I think the herd may disagree, once they have been conditioned enough to accept it.

Swiss Hold Referendum On Lockdown Powers

Switzerland is utilising its democratic political decision-making process by holding a referendum on whether to strip the Swiss government of its powers regarding covid lockdown measures.

by PAUL BENNETT

The unique system of democracy in Switzerland known as 'Direct Democracy' is the driving force in initiating this people-led referendum.

Direct Democracy allows Swiss citizens to contest, change or modify all laws and changes to the constitution. The right to request a referendum is an integral part of Swiss democracy. For a vote to take place, at least 50,000 signatures from citizens are needed within 100 days to trigger a referendum.

A campaign group called 'Friends of the Constitution' have handed in a petition with 86,000 signatures, well over the threshold needed to trigger a nationwide vote.

The petition is in direct response to the Covid-19 Act which was passed by central government in Bern, which grants the government unchecked powers and control to impose harsh unlimited rules to stop the spread of the virus.

In December, the government issued a nationwide lockdown with plans it may continue until the end of February.

Christoph Pfuger, board member of the Friends of the Constitution stated that the rationale for the referendum is "the government is taking advantage of the pandemic to introduce more control and less democracy.

The long-term problems that will arise from this kind of approach will be grave. We are a movement that says crisis management cannot be done without the will of the sovereign-the people. You cannot govern without its people".

The campaign group have been "astonished" by the level of public support and speed with which it has gathered the signatures.

The important referendum is planned for June 2021. Campaigners hope if the Covid-19 Act is repealed, it will prevent the government from introducing such onerous rules in a future emergency.

A fundamental cornerstone of a democratic nation is freedom of expression and freedom of debate. Many of our basic freedoms, civil liberties and human rights have been withheld in the past year under the guise of a 'deadly pandemic'.

In a time of authoritarian control, it is refreshing to see true democracy and people-power alive and well in at least one European country.

Defiance Grows Across Europe

While public resistance grows to lockdown measures and other tyrannical edicts by regimes in lockstep with each other, you would hardly know it from watching the broadcast media or reading most of the mainstream press.

by DARREN SMITH

Over 10,000 marched in Vienna, Austria on Sat. 16th Jan. while 50,000 businesses in Italy co-ordinated to open on the same night, encouraging customers to visit their favourite bars and restaurants.

On the same day in Amsterdam, thousands of protesters waved flags and carried signs that read: "Freedom: stop this siege" while chanting: "What do we want? Freedom!"

They were met with riot police, dozens of horses charging and water cannons on the museumplein - this despite the Dutch government's having resigned due to a child benefit scandal just a few days before. Further rioting erupted across dozens of Dutch cities on Sunday including a testing centre being burned in Urk, with resistance to disproportionate lockdown measures continuing as we went to press.

The protests were in response to tighter lockdown restrictions similar to here in Britain, with schools and 'non-essential' businesses ordered to close.

In the Polish highlands, businesses have decided to come together and successfully re-open, given that they were going out of business with another lost season.

How Lockdowns Damage Our Immunity

by CHARLES SPEDDING

Throughout the covid crisis, Boris Johnson has always said that he is 'following the science'.

The Prime Minister has no scientific background and relies entirely upon the advice he receives from members of the Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies (Sage). In reality he is following the opinion of a small group of scientists while ignoring the opinion of all scientists with an alternative view.

Therefore, the important question becomes: are members of Sage following the science? I intend to demonstrate that the answer to that question is: No, they are not.

The advice of Chris Whitty, Patrick Vallance and their team has been consistent. They want to prevent or slow down the spread of the virus with social distancing, closures, restrictions and lockdowns. They originally said there was only very weak evidence for wearing masks but in June, when the virus was at its seasonal low point, face coverings became mandatory.

We are now in January, and despite strict lockdowns or tiers since early November, Chris Whitty is telling us that hospitals are about to be overrun with surging covid-19 cases. He and other members of Sage are blaming the public for not being fully compliant with the restrictions.

We are also told that a mutation of the virus is much more transmissible, and we need harder and longer lockdowns. A worldwide search of relevant scientific literature paints a different picture.

Dr Sheldon Cohen is a Professor of Psychology at the Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh. He has spent over three decades studying the connection between psychological stress and its impact on viral respiratory diseases. [1]

His research involves a thorough psychological assessment of his volunteers before they are placed in quarantine and exposed to viruses causing influenza or the common cold. The severity of the symptoms suffered by each individual are measured and compared with their pre-infection status. Professor Cohen consistently finds that people with the highest levels of long-term stress suffer more extreme symptoms than those with low levels of stress. He also finds that smoking and low vitamin levels are linked to poor outcomes.

Factors associated with decreased risk included social integration, social support, physical activity, adequate and efficient sleep, and moderate alcohol intake. Many may be relieved to know that teetotalism and excessive alcohol intake were both linked with worse outcomes. This may be because a drink or two tends to make us more relaxed and relieves stress for a time.

Professor Cohen says, "Social integration refers to the degree to which an individual participates in a broad range of social relationships and is generally defined in terms of the number of social roles one plays (e.g. spouse, parent, friend, fellow employee, volunteer, church member). Social integration has been found to predict lesser mortality as well as lower risk for cardiovascular disease onset and disease progression.

These associations are thought to occur because social integration tends to boost positive psychological states that have beneficial effects on a range of disease-relevant physiological pathways. In contrast, a particularly low level of integration is viewed as social isolation, which is experienced as a stressful event."

Social support refers to the amount of help you receive from family and friends. It can range from practical help with basic chores, to a phone call to say 'hello', and all the way through to a shoulder to cry on when something sad has happened.

Whatever form it takes, it improves our sense of self-worth by confirming that we are loved and other people care about us. Our social interactions are vital to our humanity and Professor Cohen's research shows they are vital for our immunity to disease.

The use of draconian lockdowns and severe restrictions, which have been in place in one form or another for ten months, have utterly devastated our social integration and social support.

The deliberate use of fear by the Sage committee and the daily reports on covid-associated deaths by the media have put everybody under prolonged psychological stress. The 'science' clearly shows that this is the wrong approach.

Chris Whitty is currently telling us that the new variant of the coronavirus is much more transmissible than the original. I propose that he may be mistaken and it only appears to be more transmissible because his stress-inducing, anti-social lockdowns have rendered every man, woman and child in the country considerably more susceptible to infection.

In March and April 2020, when infections were peaking, healthy people under the age of 60 were minimally affected by the virus. This may no longer be true because of the wilful destruction of our social networks.

It would appear that Chris Whitty, our Chief Medical Officer, is unaware of Professor Cohen's work. If that is true, he is negligent in his duty to the nation.

However, it would not be the first time he has failed to take account of relevant information.

• There is a considerable body of evidence to show that optimum levels of Vitamin D reduce the severity of viral infections. [2]

He has never suggested we should supplement our diets during the winter months despite the fact there is no downside to an ideal level of this essential nutrient.

• He has made no mention of the fact that 95% of deaths have occurred in people with pre-existing metabolic disease. These conditions are frequently caused by a diet which elevates blood sugar. Research has shown that people with raised blood sugar suffer more severe infections than those with normal levels. [3]

• Throughout his tenure as Chief Medical Officer he has made no attempt to tackle the enormous problem of obesity and all its associated diseases. He is the top doctor in a country where 65% of people are overweight and he has no solution for it.

The only option he offers to tackle covid-19 is to repeat and intensify lockdowns. He does not seem to realise they do not work. [4]

We cannot expect Boris Johnson and Matt Hancock to 'follow the science' when even their advisers refuse to follow it.

Marie Curie, The 1939 Cancer Act, And The Legacy Of Raymond Rife

by LOUIZE SMALL

We've all heard of Marie Curie and her prize-winning contributions to science but not so many of us know who Raymond Rife is. Perhaps that is because the Cancer Act of 1939 made it illegal for treatments and cures to be advertised, offered or discussed outside of official circles, unless by state-approved mouthpieces.

The 1939 Cancer Act was partly designed to guarantee that the nation had adequate provision for cancer treatment with radium-based radiotherapy. Marie Curie had discovered an effective method for treating tumours with gamma radiation but the radium required for the therapy was rare, a chore to extract and very expensive.

Supplies were squandered and the government of the day wanted to ensure sensible, appropriate use. A Royal Charter was established to provide funds for radium procurement and the Radium Trust (along with others) was appointed treasurer and trustee.

In the early twentieth century, radiation was all the rage; it was promoted as healthful and healing and appeared in fashionable lotions and potions. It wasn't known at the time just how harmful it could be.

Curie knew that Emil Grubbe had successfully treated cancer with x-rays and speculated that gamma rays could also be beneficial. She was right, and by 1930 radium centres were commonplace but suspicions arose about the toxic effects of the new treatment.

Senator John D. Works had raised concerns in the US Senate in 1915. He stated that radiation had the effect of making cancers worse and that many doctors thought the belief that radium could be used to cure cancers was a delusion.

In the early 1920s it emerged that women working closely with radium in a clock factory had become severely ill and disfigured due to radiation-induced tumours.

In 1932, American Billionaire Industrialist, Eben Byers, was a famous casualty of Radithor, a radium-infused elixir. He suffered terribly with multiple cancers and died within five years of his first dose. He had drunk the potion three times daily and the poison accumulated to a fatal extent. An autopsy showed that there was enough radiation in his body to kill three men.

Both Grubbe and Curie met their demise through excessive exposure to radioactive materials. Grubbe made it to 85 riddled with tumours but Curie died of Leukaemia at the age of 66 in 1934.

In the same year, Raymond Rife successfully cured 16 terminally ill cancer patients in a hospital trial. Rife's treatment used electronic frequencies to kill disease. Such was his talent that he built a microscope capable of 60,000x magnification and was able to observe how bacteria and viruses behaved unlike ever before.

He discovered that each microorganism had its own frequency and that, like an opera singer shattering a glass with her voice, the frequency emitted by each microorganism would be obliterated by a strong blast of a corresponding frequency. Since the frequency only affected the microbes it resonated with, other cells were left unharmed and there was no danger of overdose. It was ground-breaking. There was a huge banquet held in his honour to hail the 'end of all disease'.

Insurance companies were happy to fund Rife, provided that he gained approval from the International Cancer Foundation. The secretary of the foundation stipulated conditions that Rife considered distracting so the treatment wasn't approved. Rife's team flourished regardless and he found sponsorship from a local businessman. They worked hard to find irrefutable evidence and solid statistics, as they knew they were up against massive resistance from the mainstream medical moguls.

In 1938, Morris Fishbein of the American Medical Association made Rife an offer. The offer was turned down and within weeks, Rife's laboratories were burned to the ground.

In June that year, Rife was indicted on charges of medical fraud. During the trial, Rife's network were contacted and told that if they didn't stop using their machines, they would lose their medical licenses.

One doctor had his license revoked but most of them handed their equipment in and turned their backs on Rife and his invention. Two were found dead in suspicious circumstances and the others would later claim that they didn't even know who he was.

It's a similar tale to that of Stanislaw Burzynski and his anti-neoplaston treatment. Burzynski chose to work with some of the hardest tumours to treat – childhood brain tumours – and had remarkable results.

At a young age he discovered a naturally occurring peptide that was present in healthy people but absent in cancer patients and developed a successful treatment from his findings. In 1983 the FDA sought an injunction to stop Burzynski from using anti-neoplastons in his practice; it was turned down and Burzynski continued his work, perpetually harassed by the looming spectre of the FDA.

Like Rife, he had patient files confiscated and suffered constant interference in his work. He has been in and out of the courtroom, supported by many witnesses who are living testament that his methods work. People who had been failed by the orthodox medical system found healing with Dr. Burzynski.

This brings us to the double-edged sword of the only remaining part of the Cancer Act of 1939.

While the government no longer needs to ensure the supply of radioactive material for the treatment of cancer, the advertising clause of the Act still applies: there can be no advertising of cures or remedies or offers of treatment for cancer outside of government-permitted channels. While this protects us from charlatans, it also prevents us from hearing about alternative remedies from knowledgeable, experienced practitioners.

Perhaps we'd like to hear about methods of healing other than the traditional 'cut, burn and poison'. The difficulty is that not enough official statistics exist for different approaches because they are rarely subject to huge, expensive trials and results tend to vary from person to person.

Not only did Rife cure cancer but he also found the Mortal Oscillatory Rates (MOR) for polio, tuberculosis, bubonic plague, anthrax and 20 other microorganisms.

Scientists today are piecing his work together from the scant remains of his research and Rife machines do exist though they are not freely available.

It's tough to filter through all the information available but as usual, we should discern for ourselves and be allowed access to information other than that which governments and authorities wish to spoon-feed us.

Haiku, is unrhymed poetic form consisting of 17 syllables arranged in three lines of 5, 7, and 5 syllables respectively. The haiku first emerged in Japanese literature during the 17th century, as a terse reaction to elaborate poetic traditions, though it did not become known by the name haiku until the 19th century.

Delivered falsehoods made smooth
Palatable to Five Sense Brothers
A Blind Man would see through the smarm
Like an irritating indigestion
An acidic annoyance
The Liar continues burning
Planting propagated seeds of

A young girl squints at the ISDB confused
The fresh question comes,
"Who is that Mummy?"
Turning, leaving her focus
"Someone not long for this world" she sighs

Indoctrination Meets Inoculation: Interrogating Mass Vaccination

by DR. RICHARD HOUSE

With the covid drugs now being 'rolled out' across the world, how might the mass-injection juggernaut conceivably be halted? Answer: philosophically at the level of "the science" itself, and also by challenging the tell-tale propaganda assault of the pro-vax establishment?

The individual effects of being, or not being, injected are central, as are the totality of effects upon the whole human ecosystem of mass-experimentation programmes.

Where, for example, is the 'scientific research' on the impact on natural immune systems of the relentless mass injection of children?

For decades, American children's natural immune systems have been blitzed with scores of shots – detailed in Dr Mateja Cernic's recent book Ideological Constructs of Vaccination (Vega Press, 2018); yet is any link being made between this fact, and the US being the world's worst-affected nation in relation to covid-19? Predictably, none – because neither our positivistic scientists nor Big Pharma dare look into such quintessentially scientific questions. And we all know why.

Celebrated Philosopher of Science Paul K. Feyerabend (1924–94) wrote prophetically about the authoritarian tendencies of modern science and technology in Science in a Free Society (New Left Books, 1978) and in The Tyranny of Science (Polity, 2011).

With any voices challenging the unctuously uncritical mainstream narrative on covid experimental injections today being systematically silenced, Professor Feyerabend must be turning in his grave. For democracy depends upon the open-minded discussion of a rich diversity of views – and it just isn't happening.

In his famous 1974 talk 'How to defend society against science', Feyerabend said: "Science has now become as oppressive as the ideologies it had once to fight… Heretics in science are still made to suffer from the most severe sanctions… Science has become rigid, [and] it has ceased to be an instrument of change and liberation… [It] inhibits freedom of thought" – adding that "Scientists quite often just don't know what they're talking about". Prophetic words indeed.

Mainstream medicine's uncritical support of mass injection is firmly rooted in a positivistic technocratic worldview; yet a mounting groundswell of dissent has other ideas, with technocratic 'modernity' and scientism being decisively undermined by holistic 'New Science' thinking.

Massive commercial vested interests (aka "Big Pharma") also perpetuate vaccination ideology; and following Michel Foucault and Georges Canguilhem, the role of power in determining which 'science' is granted legitimacy is clear for anyone who looks for it.

Feyerabend again: "An independent science has long ago been replaced by the business science which lives off society and strengthens its totalitarian tendencies… The aim is no longer to find truth… but to keep the money coming in… [with] the show rigged in science's favour… The superiority of science is not the result of research, or argument; it is the result of political, institutional, and even military pressures".

As Mateja Cernic shows, peer-reviewed case-study accounts show a considerable number of families whose children have been permanently harmed by vaccination.

The research claiming vaccines to be safe is routinely based on aggregative statistical ("ecological") reasoning which conveniently "hides" individual impacts, rather than upon detailed and painstaking individual case-studies of actual children.

Empirical research can also only monitor immediate or, at best, medium-term effects; it's quite impossible for narrowly specified positivistic research to reveal the total collateral effects of mass vaccination, including its life-long effects.

Yet many people have a deep intuitive sense that there's something fundamentally wrong with mass vaccination for diseases which are only very rarely life-threatening – and such intuitive wisdom should never be condescendingly dismissed by the medical establishment as "unscientific", "ill-informed" lay-prejudice.

Why do we never hear medical science trumpeting the deaths from Adverse Drug Reactions? – which peer-reviewed studies quoted by Cernic show to number over 100,000 per annum in the USA, and nearly 200,000 in the European Union (conservative estimates).

And if the vaccines are 'completely safe', as we're constantly being told, why are manufacturers and administrators of vaccines granted legal immunity from any harmful effects?

Dr Cernic writes: "Claims that vaccines 'undergo rigorous and extensive testing', that they 'are held to the highest standard of safety', etc. are utter lies. The fact that these claims [are] made by distinguished state institutions, charged with vaccine safety surveillance and monitoring, makes these lies absolutely inexcusable." This is no rhetorical diatribe – people don't get awarded Ph.D.'s for unevidenced rants!

Technocratic scientism's manic attempt to silence any systematic criticism of vaccination ideology is fundamentally anti-scientific, and we must fearlessly call it out wherever we see it. And Feyerabend's devastating critique of scientism complemented by Cernic's exhaustive academic study of vaccination ideology are excellent places to start.

Freedom Network Update

by KAREN DODD

Although the clue is in the name, people have asked me what is the actual purpose of The Freedom Network (TFN) and why should they join? A better question and my reply, is why wouldn't you?

If you have got this far in reading The Light, maybe you are looking for answers to the current madness and possibly crave connection with like-minded souls. That's where The Freedom Network comes in.

For example, conducting a 'lawful' meeting under this 'new normal' dictatorship which the UN's global 'build back better' society is pushing our way is challenging. However, Di, one of our Hub coordinators came up with a successful answer which has been shared on TFN.

"I think it's fair to say that our mental health is under attack. In addition to the government's deliberate policy of using covert psychological strategies to propagate unremitting fear, those for whom freedom is precious are also grieving the loss of our rights and liberties as well as the futures we had planned.

We recognised that supporting mental health should be a key objective for our group, both for our own sanity and that of our community. We decided to mirror the NHS volunteer responder scheme by becoming Health Volunteer Responders, who have trained as Mental Health Ambassadors.

Our volunteers meet legitimately for training and support purposes and when travelling around the community we carry lanyards which state that we are Health Volunteer Responders. Everything we do is risk assessed – our venues, meetings and our own vulnerability to Covid (templates on our website). To date, stating that we are Mental Health Ambassadors and Health Volunteer Responders has enabled us to visit people and travel freely.

We shortlisted a number of mental health training courses, however, we chose the Udemy Mental Health Ambassador course because it is designed for people who want to promote good mental health and are willing to be there for others.

It is not aimed at mental health professionals as it's not about providing treatment. The course is short and inexpensive (there are often sales where all courses are available for around £10)."

Another example is dentistry. A recent member offers advice to our community on dental care, thereby avoiding the inevitable PCR test or "V" possibly soon to be required, prior to your dental appointment.

Further Community Hubs on our online platform include swapping holiday homes, exchanging items such as eggs or homegrown veg for a haircut, or yoga lesson, contributing to our Comedy and Music hubs, advice on cryptocurrency, the list goes on.

But most importantly, meeting new, like-minded friends in your local area could be the best tonic ever, right now. Better than a vaccine without a doubt!

The Freedom Network is creating a parallel community for those who choose to live outside the matrix; we are finding ways to exchange, barter, trade, love, live and learn. We are networking for our freedom!

The world is changing at bullet speed and we are adapting as quickly as we can; out of this chaos will evolve the beautiful world we all want to live in, not dominated by corrupt leaders, corporations or power hungry individuals. We are spreading freedom across the nation, so far with 140 Hubs and growing daily.

Get The Truth About

Robert Redfern, Founder of Naturally Healthy News, took his first steps into the world of natural health back in 1985, following the premature death of his parents from lung disease, which inspired him to search for natural solutions to major health problems.

Robert's research into nutrition made him realise that specific nutrient deficiencies (such as enzymes, selenium, iodine, D3, vitamin C and magnesium) and poor diet choices are the prime cause of disease. His full lifestyle plan covers these critical areas in great detail and has had thousands of people worldwide report a complete recovery.
