2012 Religious Worldviews Survey Codebook

The 2012 Religious Worldviews Survey (2012 RWS)
Funded by the National Science Foundation and was administered between October 4 and October 17, 2012. The survey is a stratified national sample of registered and unregistered Black and White adults who identified as Christians. The survey has 1,146 respondents (599 White and 547 Black), and a completion rate of 60%. A random sample of panel members was drawn from GfK's KnowledgePanel®. 1,913 (excluding breakoffs) responded to the invitation, yielding a final stage completion rate of 59.9%. The recruitment rate for this study, reported by GfK, was 14.9% and the profile rate was 64.8%, for a cumulative response rate of 5.9%. The response summary metrics were calculated using AAPOR RR6, which accounts for the multiple phases of survey recruitment and selection (for a detailed explanation see Callegaro and DiSogra 2008).

The 2012 Religious Worldviews Survey were administered via GfK Knowledge Networks, the only online survey panel based on a representative probability sample of the whole U.S. While other online panels rely on opt-in recruitment efforts, Knowledge Networks relies on probability-based recruitment. Aware of the biases created by variation in internet access, Knowledge Networks uses "address-based sampling" to select panelists. Further, they provide panelists with internet access if they don't have it.
