About depicting the Prophet Muhammad

> Before we go any further, I should perhaps address the fact that it's considered extremely taboo to "depict" the Prophet Muhammad. Negative portrayals are especially frowned upon - as Salman Rushdie and those Danish cartoonists found out to their detriment! But even positive portrayals such as the movie The Message and its forthcoming remake sidestep controversy by not acknowledging Muhammad. This is intellectual and creative cowardice in my opinion. It's also laughably counter-productive because NOT portraying the Prophet Muhammad draws your attention to the fact that he's not there! Any artist or architect will tell you that a structure draws your eyes to the SPACE. In this manner, the rigid walls of dogma produce a Muhammad-shaped hole - making him the ultimate "elephant in the room" (which is perhaps the real blasphemy). This offends against the original reason that depictions were forbidden in the first place, which is that no human being is worthy of special treatment and the teachings should be left to speak for themselves. The law against it (which isn't enshrined in scripture by the way) is also an anachronism because the teachings of Islam have survived intact and are no longer in jeopardy. No work of entertainment can override 1'400 years of cultural evolution! In the 21st century, Islam faces an entirely different problem - which is that people know all too LITTLE about its founder. Keeping him a secret will only perpetuate the absurd prejudices that many westerners have. Indeed, it never occurred to me to make this game until I was implored to by several Muslim players. By depicting the Prophet Muhammad, it's my intention to diffuse the mystery that surrounds him and put the emphasis back on philosophical matters. His existence is like a finger pointing to the moon - we can allow it to direct our gaze skyward without focusing on it...

Isn't this the same guy that made a game where you can play as Jesus and bitch slap people? Still pretty cool that he decided to make a game about Muhammad considering all the kinds of crazy people out there.

I wonder if there's a wife mini-game where you get to select or win new wives. Imagine the possibilities. It could be sort of like the hostess mini game in Yakuza. There could even be little items like teddy bears or nondescript vans full of puppies and candy you could use to win over the younger ones.

I was hoping so too but...

However, there is one scene where he accepts a widow as his wife out of mercy when many males die. This is to demonstrate the logic behind his stance on multiple wives.

Lame. Will wait for Directors Cut.

A-fear-ism: The Ignorance Of Atheism $14.99
At a point in time when every other person is an unblinking atheist, A-fear-ism offers the most cogent argument against the movement yet. Dispensing with philosophical jargon and pretentious posturing, religious educator Mat Dickie brings a refreshing dose of common sense to the debate. He exposes the ignorant assumptions made by the cynical mind, and reveals the arguments against religion to be anything but "rational". As the title of the book suggests, he considers atheism to be "the irrational fear of religion" - and leaves us in no doubt that we embrace such a negative world view to our detriment...

Must be a genius. He turned 'Atheism' into 'A-Fear-ism' Brilliant mind at work. And for only $15 bucks?!

But, first you really have to ask yourself - is a game such as this really acceptable in a civilized country?

Kaeru has been banned. You'll have to ask me and I'm not commenting until they release an HD version.

On a slightly related note, PM sent.
