tries hard to avoid distasteful racist joke Honestly though, I know nothing about fighting games, so you never know, maybe there is a Muslim character in that genre.

That was my first thought coming into this thread.

My question is, why does there need to be a Muslim character in a fighting game? If you want one so badly, make one in Soul Calibur IV.

Exactly. Having different ethnicities in a game is quite different from having different religions in a game.

Apparently not. I had assumed you were referring to depictions of Muhammad, but you said "a Muslim", which would lead one to believe you were referencing the whole of the millions of Muslims. I was not aware that there was an incident that would warrant such an extreme postulation.

Just looking ahead. Now that they've got the entire civilized world crapping their pants at the thought of even mentioning Muhammed's name, they'll push to the next step. And then the next, and the next, and the next. And we'll keep giving in to them, because if we don't, we're racist.

The GGD isn't the place for Islamaphobic rants. At all.

I'm not the one who posted the thread about a dearth of Muslim characters in fighting games. I just gave my answer. And it wasn't Islamaphobic.

There's a big difference about not wanting a depiction of a revered religious figure and not allowing any depictions of any Muslims.

Of course there's a difference. And now that they've accomplished one, I'm sure they're working up to the other. They've gotten their cookie, and now they want their glass of milk to wash it down with.

I didn't make myself clear. This particular line of discussion has nothing to do with games and has no place on the GGD. The topic itself can produce discussion about games, but this particular tangent doesn't belong.

As a moderator, that isn't how it works. It is my job to keep stuff on topic, and since the thread quickly veered in the wrong direction and ended up not having anything to do with games and was just people arguing religion and politics, it ended up being something better suited to the Off Topic board.
