If all Video Games had major cult/religious followings, which would be the craziest?

[–] Skiddoosh 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

I may be wrong here, but I think it's a reference to Pokemon Red/Blue/Green. In the game, there is a portion where you are in a cave and at some point in the cave you see a Pokemon Trainer who is blocking the path to 2 fossils. If you talk to him, he challenges you to a battle saying something along the lines of "You can't have them!" you then engage in battle and when you win, he relents and gives you one of the two fossils, which can later be turned into a live pokemon. The name of the trainer you fight is always "Super Nerd _____" hence the reference.

I think this is truly the right answer. Unfortunately I don't think too many people know how crazy hardcore Eve players actually are. I mean at some point you start getting confused on what is reality and what is the game. Its insane cause your real life and Eve starts getting blended.

I've never had to fill out a more in depth application to a clan than I did in Eve. I'm pretty sure I got background checked.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] jm434 731 punten 5 maanden geleden

As a former WH corp CEO, we took our security VERY seriously with as in-depth security checks as you could possibly get.

We also had a shrine dedicated to death filled with the corpses of those we had slain in combat or pillaged in carebear holes.

Ahh those were the days...

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] SoSaysCory 142 punten 5 maanden geleden

I could never get into a group like this, and all my friends were csrebears, and that's why I quit eve. All I ever wanted was to be in a group like this.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] jm434 244 punten 5 maanden geleden*

It's a lot of work. In nullsec your obligated to turn up to fights and stuff, but in WH space you have to scan out the connecting holes, scope out potential targets, turn up for ratting/mining/transportation, take part in massive operations against bigger targets and generally be available on short notice. Without a good excuse if you slacked we would demote you a security clearance level or perhaps outright expulsion.

We took it further though as we designed a (pretty fair) payment system based on the work you did each week in the hole, paying you for everything from scanning to pvp. But you had to either submit payment reports (i.e. what you had done and when) or a the daily designated manager would submit them. (This was before IG browser was good enough for people to start building apps for this)

It worked really well and we had a good group of core players for a couple years but it stagnated as we were unwilling to upgrade (WH class) and we eventually died.

No regrets though, my and the core leadership still chat and hang on IRL many years later.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] SoSaysCory 77 punten 5 maanden geleden

Back when I played eve I was infinitely available at short notice. I have since moved on to other games that I can play when I want because I have two kids. But I look back fondly on eve.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] jm434 23 punten 5 maanden geleden

Yeah I was big into EVE from 06 and despite being 16 I was able to grow a following of people that eventually lead to my WH corp but then I started uni in 2010 and I basically stopped playing.

Now I have no time to play EVE, but i keep up with lore/game changes. Maybe one day I'll get back into it, but for now as you say 'I look back fondly on eve'.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] SoSaysCory 10 punten 5 maanden geleden

Anything else you play now? I play a lot of KSP and some Elite/star citizen to get my space fix, but nothing really has the depth of eve. I'm hoping SC becomes as deep and complex as eve is, with better piloting.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] jm434 6 punten 5 maanden geleden

X-COM, TW games are my current vices and i'll occasionally re-install the X games for my space fix. I did the whole kickstarter thing with SC and it looks amazing, but I've been really lazy and haven't checked on it since they brought out the hangar bay thing. Plus I'm back to a (gaming) laptop so not sure how it would take SC.

just to be sure, we are talking ingame currency? from what I've heard about eve players they might be crazy enough to actually full time hire people with real money...

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] jm434 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

Ingame yeah :P Considering wormholes pull in enough money to play the game for free it was almost like paying for their subscription.

Thank god I dropped EVE after trying it for 2 months. This doesn't appeal to me at all.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] jm434 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

EVE is an amazing complex and deep experience and there will be aspects for different people. Wormholes aren't for everyone, and were definitely considered to be hardcore when they were first introduced. But instead of wormholes you have nullsec, lowsec, hisec, exploration, incursions, mining, roleplaying, industry, finance, salvaging, drug manufacturing and on and on and on.

But crucially to have a true experience, you have to meet a a group of people and creat/join a corporation together and become firm 'internet friends' to the point that it could become 'real life friendship'. Without this, your EVE experience will be shit.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] A_Mouse_In_Da_House 8 punten 5 maanden geleden

Wormholes are a whole different world. There's a reason wormholers are considered basically insane by the general populace of EVE.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] bangtime 4 punten 5 maanden geleden

Did wormholes make me crazy or did I got to a wormhole because i'm crazy? IDK, i'm fucking insane for sure deaux.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] A_Mouse_In_Da_House 4 punten 5 maanden geleden

CCP, the developer, never intended for people to live in wormholes. But people figured out how. Wormholes are very insular, you don't really deal with the outside world except to supply, and hunt. Most of the time, wormhole corps try to fight wormhole corps. And respect is a huge thing within the community. Think like mad max in a video game world.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] ofekme 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

didnt see it yet eve sounds really cool but sounds like it take alot of money/time

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] A_Mouse_In_Da_House 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

Its time mainly. Being in a wormhole corp means you give your corp your phone number and they can literally call you. The wormhole corps are much smaller and closer than most other groups in game. They screen for personality matches because you literally are living and sharing everything with your group of guys in your floaty shielded base thing (called a pos, for Player Owned Station).

Living that way means you have to trust your buddies a lot, and you legit care about each other after a while. It's unreal what it's like, I know more about my corp mates than some of my friends.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] ofekme 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

damm that sounds good also probably hurts when someone backstubs the corp anyway that game is really fun to hear about but kind of unfun to play imo (atleast as a solo)

Was a member of a handful of large PVP 0.0 alliances. There are fun times (mostly roaming in small to medium size gangs). But you can do that in a small corp. So what does being in a giant corp add to the experience? A lot of "wars" that are so cluttered with ships the game basically becomes turn based, annoying beuracracy shit, staying up all night defending construction, mandatory raids, just really a lot of shit that took the fun out for me. I quit for good after about 1.5 months in BOB.

As both someone who's done the whole recruitment jazz, AND someone who's been recruited into almost any corner of eve, I can say this:

- SOME eve groups have the most arduous application processes
- SOME eve groups will scrutinise not only your character's history, but any potentially associated characters, major allies, past associates AND anywhere your username also comes up
- SOME eve groups will find out more about you than you thought was on the net, only to prove you are real

but then I can also say

- MOST eve groups will only give a cursory look over your history
- MOST eve groups couldn't be damned what your third last contractee was involved in during 2014
- MOST eve groups will not have the best recruitment/security team, so the idea of cross checking your username on other websites hasn't occurred to them (yet).

The group I'm in currently had me go through 2 formal interviews, two informal chats, register a total now of 7 API keys, subscribe to 8 authorisation and security portals for forums/communications/broadcasts/security/organisation, and has checked my history going back over three years.

The hilarious bit is that despite looking at all that, and in spite of obviously having (at some point) connections to three now enemy groups, instances of backstabbing, theft and espionage, AND a tendency to lose expensive shit needlessly... they still took me on as a friend.

BASICALLY, it's still a game.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

Potentially, yes. However, if you are referring to one of the earliest Titan losses allegedly due to IRL Russian activities, it was an alleged cut of the guy's connection - literally cutting the cables.

I've never seen verification of this.

> I mean at some point you start getting confused on what is reality and what is the game.

No no, the reality is that Eve isn't just a game. Eve IS real life. You wouldn't say Soccer or Hockey or Football or Tennis isn't real life. It's people working together or against one another in some test of skill.

Eve is just the sandbox you knew as kids, presented in modern day form. You'll make friends, you'll meet people you don't like, you'll have to deal with bullies.

You know you're flying internet space ships, and all the while you know you're flying internet space ships.

But just like fighting in the sandbox was never about the sand; Playing Eve isn't really about the space ships.

At one point one of the major corps in Eve (think guilds, but don't say that to an Eve player) had some webapp that was hammering CCP (the Dev's) API. So the devs reached out on Twitter for their IT person.

Yes, corps in Eve have IT people.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] [deleted] 5 punten 5 maanden geleden

Usually less on corp but more on alliance level (many corps grouped together). The whole infrastructure backbone can become quite heavy. You have your voice service, your forums, your timer boards and all that linked to an authenticated account that is checked back with the game devs API. And then some moron director in some idiot carebear group wildly recruits people, knocking out the entire point of the IT system.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Nutbolt 5 punten 5 maanden geleden

A lot of the larger alliances and some more organised corporations have some serious IT to be able to run and stay organised. It allows for a lot of automation, such as automated basic permissions. If someone leaves the alliance/corporation they are removed from that groups IT services within the hour automatically.

It also allows for the organisation of potentially thousands of people across the planet. You suddenly need pilots on? No worries, send out a ping, which will send a message to everyone logged into their chat rooms. This can reach thousands of people instantly. Then people start logging in and logging into voice comms, these comms need to be able to cope with hundreds of people.

Then outside of communication, some corporations/alliances provide tools members can use to track their characters information. EVE provides a massive amount of information through their API. As an example all directors in my corporation can view every market transaction by our corp dating back to March 2011.

TL;DR: Most organised corporations/alliances have more hardware and IT services, and more secure services than most small businesses I know.

Its not even remotely close to eve. I've played both. Eve will swallow you. In 6 weeks of my start date, I was leading fleets of 50-100 people, while being unable to fly any of the ships that fit doctrine. Those fleets were more rare, more common were the 20 man fleets that I would take into a different sector of space where you didn't know if anyone else was there. You didn't have standard entrance points, and often times, groups would hot drop your tiny group with far superior numbers to sacrifice to the God of that space.

Eve is a whole different level compared to PS2.

The community that has grown around EvE is a strange one. Trial by fire and progress by smashing your head against a brick wall are common, and yet at times they are strangely compassionate. From time to time you see a post about a player who passed away, and there are countless comments "o7", a greeting and sign of respect in EvE.

One thing I always said is that despite all the talk of spaceships EvE is really a game about people, and the spaceships are just a medium of interaction. Killing is a way of saying hello and frozen corpses are like ornaments for your mantlepiece, and then you will shower a newbro in kindness and smile fondly as they rush of into the void to seek the glory of battle.

Let's not go to New Eden, 'tis a silly place.

> Killing is a way of saying hello

This is so true. I'm not much of a PvP person, but I absolutely loved jumping through wormholes doing exploration alone. I remember when I was exploring one day and someone came up to me and destroyed my ship. I then messaged him asking him how to avoid situations like that in the future and he took me around space, to some of his corps' bases and gave me free items, ISK, and advice. All of this AFTER destroying my brand new ship.

I only played for 3 months but I do want to get back into it because of people like that.

I've said it before, but having played a reasonable number of MMOs I feel that EVE is the game that the most players treat like a game.

Sure, we'll hunt you down and kill you but that's just because that's what we in the game as 'pirates' or 'justice warriors' or 'barbarians' or whatever we're calling ourselves this week. We all subscribe and build narratives whether in or out of the game. We lose ships and die and shit but that's not because we hate you as a person, but because it just so happens that you (as a pilot) happen to be in our (as pilots) way.

I think the issue people have with playing is understanding that whilst we will happily murder you (because as pilots, we're pirates) we'll also happily tell you how we murdered you and how to avoid being murdered in the future and how to murder other players (because as people, we're not assholes).

Ok, first thing, I need you to look up.

No, not... let go of the mouse. Use your neck. Yep, like that. Pull your head upward, and lock your eye position. You should see a line of darkness cross your vision. Don't worry, that's normal- it's the edge of your monitor.

Keep going. Look around you. No. Fingers off the mouse. Stop playing internet-spaceships-spinning-in-stations. You'll find yourself in a box-like area. This is called a room. Get up and walk around it, briefly.

Continue this exercise one to three times a day. When do you can do so without panic attacks, leg cramps, or calling for a jabber/mumble/teamspeak mic-check, you'll eventually move on to opening the door. (You know, the part of your box-room-area that looks like it could fall out).

Don't do that before you're ready. I've seen doing so nearly kill a regular player. My friend with four accounts nearly died last time he tried it. I knew a guy who solo'd incursions who was instantly vaporized when he opened a window. Take it slow, and be careful. Going cold turkey will probably kill you as well.

[–] sk_2013 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

Honestly, if you consider being an armorlogi 'fun', then I must be missing something. Nothing like flying around clicking little boxes and pressing your first four F keys.

CCP's whole "Individual player participation" thing is bullshit. People just use alts for shit they want done themselves. Even in game, any sort of PvE is shooting red crosses in different orders. You can do things like PI or reactions to make money, which is literally less interesting than watching paint grow.

You can do PvP, but I don't know if I'd consider that fun. It's half an hour of getting your people and fleet together, then four hours of trying to find a fight, then nintey seconds of getting your shit wrecked by a hotdrop. Worse, you might find nothing at all, and cheap frigate PvP is pretty much untenable because T3 destroyers will eat literally any frigate alive.

I live in a C4 wormhole system. That means I have to spend all kinds of time hauling in ammo, replacement modules and ships, and fuel, and hauling out PI materials, components, etc. No part of this process is at all fun. Most of them are irritating.

Normally this is where someone jumps in screaming "Faction warfare, faction warfare", but FW is a joke at this point.

Does EVE have fun moments? Oh yeah, easily- but it's fun despite the game, not because of it. People joke about spreadsheets online, and while that's not really a fair assessment, I would say the game is about ninty-five percent mindless tedium. As a strategy game player, I'm used to tedium. Thrive on it, even, but unlike most strategy games, EVE never really gives you that mental payoff. (Old Sov Mechanics come to mind. If you want proof ccp still hasn't learned, look at phoebe.)

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] A_Mouse_In_Da_House 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

I live in a c6 Magnatar? You know, that special one, namely Nova? Armor logi is much more fun than ewar or f1 monkeying. So I must be missing something about what you're doing. I've lead 5 man small gang tristan roams (with morale exequror) and we've killed orthrus and apoc fleets.

I have almost no mindless tedium. Nearly every day is filled with killing something, or finding some new wormhole outpost from some group who doesn't know how to properly set up pos guns.

I started in Brave, and in 6 weeks was accepted into one of the better wormhole groups in EVE. All you have to do to get content, is to find or make content. Can't say anything about life outside wormholes because most of my game has been leading day trips into wormholes and evictions.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] mediaboy 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

> Honestly, if you consider being an armorlogi 'fun', then I must > be missing something. Nothing like flying around clicking little boxes and pressing your first four F keys.

Then step up your game and join groups where it's more than that. Take on anchor roles, take on leadership positions, learn how to be a useful member of the fleet. Start taking responsibility for your ship and how you fly it. Step away from fleets where you can not take responsibility for your actions and join fleets and groups where you have to pilot your ship or the entire thing cascades out of control.

Your complaint is "I don't like how I'm playing this game" and that's something you can easily fix: go find a better way of playing the game.

> CCP's whole "Individual player participation" thing is bullshit. People just use alts for shit they want done themselves.

I spent 6 months running 2-4 accounts in a large proportion (90%+) of fleets across a large-ish nullsec entity. Often I was one of the few HIC pilots, one of the few tackle pilots and the logi anchor.. simultaneously. I took "do it yourself" to the next level and in doing so burnt myself out and did everything less efficiently. Once again, this comes down to "find an area of the game where you can't just use alts for everything". Also find players to play with who let you not just use alts. I haven't hauled shit for myself in about 3 years. I just contract it to a guy who hauls it for me, or ask someone to grab it whilst they're there. I haven't had my own links ever, yet I haven't ever FC'd a fleet where we don't have links of whatever kind I want. There's groups that will salvage for you, groups that will loot for you, groups that will do whatever parts of the game you don't want to do to let you play the game that you want to play.

Your complaint is "I feel I have to do everything myself" and that's something you can easily fix: get other people that enjoy the bits you don't like doing and trust them to do it right. And realise that there are areas of space where doing everything yourself is either impossible or impractical. A single player can only take on so much responsibility.

> You can do PvP, but I don't know if I'd consider that fun. It's half an hour of getting your people and fleet together, then four hours of trying to find a fight, then nintey seconds of getting your shit wrecked by a hotdrop.

In all of my time in EVE, I have only once spent longer than an hour looking for a fight without finding something I could kill. Putting aside the fact that scouts, intel and batphones tend to bring you a lot of fights (seriously, see point two: some people love helping you shit on someone's day. You just have to know those people) there's the fact that you can jump into any losec region and normally find players to fight. The only time I've ever spent any time looking for a fight is when I decided to give a wormhole group a chance to form up to fight us and they batphoned everyone within 30 jumps to come fight us, so we left after making their reinforcements panic.

For a long time I was a member (and for several months, a director) of a losec group that promised to get you a fight within 30 minutes. Normally vastly outnumbered, we fucked around in all kinds of PvP and sec. Everything from frigates and destroyers (including some doctrines where the most expensive ship was under 2m ISK and whilst the video isn't up, that doctrine once took on a HAC gang and won...) to battleships to the odd occasion where we batphoned in friends to drop dreads onto an errant carriers head. And that's just the ones that are on YouTube and don't include the endless footage that I'm yet to edit and the occasions where I didn't fraps it.

I've never struggled to find a fight when I want one except when I decided to try to organise fights and didn't just let them grow organically. I've never been unexpectedly hotdropped and have done ganks that went surprisingly well.

Your complaint is "I can't find fights" and that's something you can easily fix: you can learn to use intel tools, join groups that have good scouts and good intel, learn to use the starmap, learn what fights you can and can't take. Your complaint is "the groups I fly with take too long to group up" and that's easily fixed: create doctrines, establish methods of communication to get them online (pings OP), establish common playtimes where you agree to search for things. Or learn to solo PvP without them and go for roams into the depth of space.

Perhaps your issue is that you have a very limited idea of what kind of fight you want and spend so much time looking for that kind of fight that you miss all the other content you could have killed?

> I live in a C4 wormhole system. That means I have to spend all kinds of time hauling in ammo, replacement modules and ships, and fuel, and hauling out PI materials, components, etc. No part of this process is at all fun. Most of them are irritating.

Your complaint is "I dislike wormholes". Why the fuck are you living in a wormhole?

> Normally this is where someone jumps in screaming "Faction warfare, faction warfare", but FW is a joke at this point.

Third party it. Twice as many targets to shoot if you're a third party, which normally means twice as much fun!

> I would say the game is about ninty-five percent mindless tedium.

The game is as much tedium as you make it. The majority of groups I've led and flown with in recent years have all been groups that minimised tedium. They had a clear idea of what they wanted to do and how they were going to do it. They went in with clear plans and provided a good support system to the people within them. The losec pirate alliance I ran used to literally provide the entire corp with ships on contract. We had entire groups of players that logged in, bought a cheap ship off of contracts (or dragged it out of a corp hanger if they had proper roles) and then promptly undocked and warped to a fight. This is what we viewed as "normal" and whilst it isn't for every group (especially ones that take themselves seriously) it certainly reduces tedium.

I think you just need to find some better people to play with. The issues you've described are issues with how you play EVE, rather than issues with EVE itself.

I've never raged so hard at a game, but I forced myself to suffer through it. The only redeeming quality it has is the final boss. Again, my opinions. I think that most people who praise the game have a serious case of nostalgia.

I also played Sonic Adventure 1 shortly after, and I actually enjoyed it. So...

The stats. A high stat is considered to be high teens. I have NEVER seen a character with two 30+'s and the other stats in 'good' or at least acceptable. It's literally a perfect storm of sorts. Also. If an AI chracter with a high intrigue wants to kill you. You be dead mate. You be dead.

Being a huge CK2 fan, but also being a woman, I don't see this going well for me. Marrying me wouldn't get a guy any political value whatsoever. I guess I should just go for the Seductress path, to make my own power, and hope I don't get the lover's pox.

EU4 is kind of extensive, you need at least 1GB of video memory to run it decent, and I suspect HoI4 is going to be even more taxing. And don't get me started on Skylines.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

I've got i3 3210, radeon 260x, 8gb of ram, and a CK2 campaign that started at the first start date started lagging REALLY badly around 1200. By 1300 I was getting 20 fps (on max speed) when moving the map. There's a lot of dead people and events firing when you control the whole map.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] HaroldSax 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

At max speed there's going to be lag on almost any computer, but from what I could gather from the two subs about the games is that they typically run at 4 speed or 3 speed depending on what was going on.

Are you fucking kidding me? /r/Fallout is insanely toxic and extremely antagonistic towards anyone they don't agree with. Say that you think Caesar had some good ideas and watch the entire sub jump on you and downvote you to oblivion. Say you preferred 3 over NV or NV over 3 and they'll start a screaming match about how you're wrong and fucking stupid. Not too long ago when the Anniversary Anthology was announced they went back to a month old thread and attacked anyone that said it wasn't true and told the users to kill themselves for being wrong.

/r/Fallout used to be a good sub until the FO4 announcement hit and the sub doubled in size. There used to be discussions and debates and a friendly community, now it's a hateful cesspool that attacks one another for the smallest of issues.

[–] raps_caucasionally 4 punten 5 maanden geleden

With the garrisons, pretty much. I get 1000 a day or so if I just send out my followers on one toon, a total of 30 seconds work once or twice day. So not doing much of anythihg I'll get a bit more than that every month, not counting anything else I do.

Change your recovery email to a free mail.com or yahoo account or something. Face roll on a notepad file to make a new password. Change your password to that. Close the note without saving. Delete the account recovery email address.

Congrats, you're free. You'd have to re-buy the game, the expansions, re-level characters, grind for items, make new friends. Think about it. That's too much work. Better to move on.

And then you remember that Eloquis the main tank from your guild wanted the Recruit-a-Friend mount, so you have him recruit you on a new account. Instant guild invite, and now you get to level through old dungeons with your guild members' severely overpowered alts. RaF helps level super fast, so now you're level 100 and ready to start Legion with a fresh toon. Eloquis gave you 25k gold for the mount, so you're good to go for a while with resources. You have the next few months before Legion to catch up and build your garrison, followers, shipyard, faction rep and current gear. Then you get to hang out in your garrison all day, running around in a circle waiting for a) friends to log on, b) raid queue to pop, or c) ashran queue, and you're back at square 1. This game sucks, I love it.

You can buy gamete with in game gold?

[–] [deleted] 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

Yup, it's a recent addition. You can buy a token with cash to sell for gold, and other players can buy it off the Auction House, so if you want gold or gametime you can get what you want. Pretty smart of them really, the token to sell costs a bit more money than an actual month's subscription, so they manage to make more money off the people who would rather pay with gold.

> North America: $20 USD
> Europe: €20 EUR or £15 GBP
> China: ¥30 CNY
> Taiwan: NT$500 TWD
> South Korea: ₩22,000 KRW [1]

Seems to stay around 25k for US, 45k for EU. I'm in US, haven't paid for my sub since they started it, it's a pretty easy amount of gold to get.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] murdomac 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

I think when you buy Warlords of Draenor (the current expansion) they give you a level 90 boost with it.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] MrManicMarty 6 punten 5 maanden geleden

Blah!

I don't need no boost! I'd miss out on all the questing zones, dungeons, the anticipation for those talents, imba PvP BGs... the scenery! Uhhhh... The experience.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Alexwolf117 5 punten 5 maanden geleden

anticipation for those 6 talents? Xd leveling isn't really an experience any more

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] MrManicMarty 5 punten 5 maanden geleden

Yeah, it's not as palpable as a talent each level, but those talents weren't really that interesting anyway.

That said, leveling still is an experience if you have the right attitude. The questing zones are still great IMO. BGs are annoying imba, but still stupid fun at low levels. If you get a good group in LFG, they can be fun as well. Bonus points if no one has heirlooms so you have to go a bit slower than usual.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Alexwolf117 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

eh the new talents are hardly more interesting (dk level 90 and pally tier 45 spring to mind and I haven't even looked at wow talents in 6 months) and even the big talents don't really have any more impact than big talents did before like getting crusader strike or divine storm for a ret pally or beacon for a holy pally or howling blast as a frost dk

maybe I just want wrath back idk

I'm glad you enjoy leveling though! maybe I am just too nostalgic

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] MrManicMarty 4 punten 5 maanden geleden

It's fine being nostalgic, I miss a lot of things about older WoW as well, totem quests for example, druid form quests and warlock summon quests. I wasn't around for it, but I would of loved hunter pets having different stats depending on which one you tamed - I'm on a starter edition account so I'm maxed out, but I still like going on little expedition for pets from far-away zones, went to Darkshore and Dun Morough just to get some pets and that was fun.

Same. I have stopped and started a few times over the years in an attempt to find that thing that make it so appealing before. This last time, right around level 94, I realized that it's probably gone for good.

Try a vanilla private server like Kronos or Nostralius! 1x rates, no pay to win stuff, completely blizzlike, booming population and best of all, classic World of Warcraft. It's like you're logging into 2005.

I play on Kronos because it's lag free for me, but Nostralius has a bigger population, 6k people online at a time. Kronos is a little over 1k.

I don't play these days but I still have a lot of love for the game. The last time I played a more "hardcore schedule" (sometimes 8 or 10 hrs a day or more) was PvP in WotLK.

Since then I'm kind of a jaded vet. I come back every expansion, and play for a month or so see some of the new content, level to the new cap, explore whatever they've added a bit, a few dungeons maybe, Ashran was a poorly conceived disaster alas so no pvp in the most recent xpac, can't be bothered with raid content at all though.

IDK, I used to have a love/hate/addiction relationship with it back in the day when it was fresh and new and exciting to me. These days every new xpac gives me a month or so solid entertainment, but eventually I end up letting my sub lapse due to losing interest, I like how the game functions for me now I'm a fucking casual.

Dark Souls is the correct answer. It'd be the most intense flagellant-style sun-worshiper cult ever; you see to a Soulutonist God isn't something to be worshiped, it's a target to be assassinated. Adherents believe the only way to get stronger is to suffer so you Praise the Sun and grow through suffering until you become so mighty kill God and take his mantle for your own...

But remember, time is cyclical and no matter how many times you defeat God and surpass yourself all your achievements will be stripped from you and you'll simply be tossed back once again into the same cycle of suffering over and over again. Turns out surpassing God was a false goal to lead you astray this whole time. Fuck.

So what then? The Final Answer for Soulutionists is to break the cycle of death and violence by transcending this world and finding the next, a world so bright as to be blinding, a Nirvana that all Soulutionists know as the "Outside" where the glorious Sun shines it's gross incandescence down upon you.

You see Soulutionists have realized the final truth; you can never hope to push the boulder to the top of the hill. You'll never defeat this universe, all you can do is stop fighting and go and do something else.

Welcome to Dark Souls.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] jyeJ 6 punten 5 maanden geleden

That's interesting! Where did the link get made between Dark Souls and Camus for you ? Besides, you need to go further into his texts and his life, as Camus' philosophy is much more than bleakness, it's also an invitation to live life beautifully and freely!

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] [deleted] 10 punten 5 maanden geleden

Well, I heard the whole sisyphus analogy made about dark souls and kind of stumbled on Myth of Sisyphus by Camus from there. And I know its an invitation to live beautifully and freely, but that beautiful, free life is only for those who can afford it, frankly, and I can't. I'm working to afford it, but for now I'm chained to 30k student debt, a job that gives me almost no free time, rent and expenses that tie up all my income, etc.; I can't afford to do any of the things I love anymore.

Maybe Camus would just bail on his debts and disappear, but he was a celebrity in his time who was afforded certain opportunities because of his amazing literary work and handsomeness/etc.; it's easy to be bohemian when you have a crowd of followers and tons of money to do it with.

I still try to "imagine Sisyphus happy" if I am Sisyphus, but it's taking a lot more imagining than I'd like at the moment.

> Maybe Camus would just bail on his debts and disappear, but he was a celebrity in his time who was afforded certain opportunities because of his amazing literary work and handsomeness/etc.; it's easy to be bohemian when you have a crowd of followers and tons of money to do it with.

Camus was born into poverty in the Algiers and was in Paris during Nazi occupation. He studied his way out of poverty and was the editor in chief for the resistance newspaper. Unlike Sartre, he was never bourgeois, and his "very existence was an act of rebellion."

His celebrity came from working psychotically hard in the face of futility. That was just Camus' style.

[–] fly19 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

See, I hate the PvP in the series. It feels like I'm always attacked by precessional PvP folks, and it takes me out of the game a bit, especially when they use stuff like lag-stabbing and other exploits when I'm just playing for the world and story.

I know the response is usually "get gud scrub," but I've played and beaten the whole series and never really enjoyed PvP in any of them.

[–] StochasticOoze 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

I've been relatively lucky with PvP; most of the people I've encountered have been pretty cool, waiting for me to kill any aggroed enemies and greeting me before attacking.

Then there was the guy whose name was "GIT GUD CASUL", who waited for a Heide's Knight to take away 99% of my HP, then hit me and did the mock gesture as I died.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] fly19 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

I guess it's just annoying because I mostly play single player games. And the strategies for fighting in game enemies and PvP is very different. It's the same reason I hated the Crucible in Destiny -- you can't use the gun you want. It's either one-shot headshot kill weapons or nothing. Personally, it takes away the variability of the game that I enjoy.

The only time I've been uncivil is after I'd been playing for a few hours and wasted a half-dozen human effigies in DaS2 and entered Belfry Luna looking for the the gargoyle boss. I tried to rush through, but I was invaded and just started spamming Great Soul Arrows at him as he bowed. Got into this weird pitched battle with him and won, only taking fall damage from a hole in the floor.

Sorry, random player. I was not in the mood.

IDK, maybe when I start focusing more on NG+ for each game I'll grow to like it. But I go to the series for atmosphere and that sense of melancholy loneliness that only Metroid can match. Having invading spirits pop up and use taunts and exploits on me just takes me out of the experience.

Then again, I've mostly only had bad experiences with PvP-ers, so maybe I'm just naturally soured to the whole thing.

I guess it's more interesting when it's the focus of your playthrough -- I've really only beaten each game once, trying to get through the main story in each. Because of this conversation, I'll probably give it a try when I get the time.

And true, SotC also scratches that itch pretty well. Definitely deserves to be mentioned in that genre/tone as well.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Nate1492 -6 punten 5 maanden geleden

The funny thing is it isn't hard. Turn other games on 'Hard' and you get similar experiences.

You want really hard? Devil May Cry offers some intense hard combat.

Also, 'best' combat system? The combat is slow to respond, clunky, and handles wall collision in a very terrible way.

The game is ok, but it is extremely overrated.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Antrix32 5 punten 5 maanden geleden*

The slow response is due to the weapons having weight. It's not familiar to most people becaus most games make their weapons feel very light. The wall collision issues il agree with.

when a game is praised by players and critics alike, I don't think it can be considered overrated, it's rated pretty accurately. Not that your opinion isn't your opinion, but it deserves what popularity it has(which is rather small compared to a lot of other games)

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Nate1492 -4 punten 5 maanden geleden

No, it's not.

I've played tons of war games. I've played tons of games with weighted weapons. Most games get it bad. Dark Souls is absolutely one of them.

Dark Souls weapon physics is clunky, not 'weighted'.

Try Mount and Blade.

Try Chivalry.

It can easily be overrated. It is one of the most talked about games, it doesn't have a 'rather small' amount compared to other games.

This thread proves my point. The top voted comment is Dark Souls.

I don't get how you actually think it has a rather small following.

Dark Souls 3 is the Book of Mormon simply because it happened so many years after the others.

Bloodborne is the Quran. A confused brother who believes his "exclusivity" and alternate history makes him better than the others.

Finally, Demon's Souls is paganism. Eventually its practices would be adopted by many, but few swear exclusively under its name.

There's nothing like that feeling in Dark Souls 1 where you feel like you've gone super deep into a level, things are getting tough and frustrating, only to find a door that leads you back to an area you explored 5+ hours of game time ago. The world feels massive as you crawl through it, but every now and then you'll stumble upon a path that leads you right back to familiar territory.

I like magic and dark mideval fantasy. Plus, I prefer the build variety in the souls games. I like playing quick, dodgy characters on second playthroughs of souls games, but I like being more methodical as I learn the game. I can't really do that it in Bloodborne. Bloodborne is a great game, but I haven't really gotten hooked enough to play for more than an hour or so at a time where the others kept me up late at night for weeks. Ranking your favorite series is hard because the differences between them are nitpicky. Bloodborne is definitely a much prettier, slicker game for sure.

[–] SomeGuy928 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

Yeah, I can see why you prefer the souls games then. Though Bloodborne will always have a special place in my heart because I love Gothic literature and eldritch horrors - particularly the work of Lovecraft so Bloodborne is my dream come true. I definitely see where you're coming from about the lack of variety in builds and the lack of variety in weapons and armour (RIP fashion souls). My biggest issue with DS2 is the gameplay, it just feels a lot worse than the rest of the games and the hitboxes are just atrocious. You're definitely right about how difficult it is to rank each game because they all have their own things that they do right and wrong. Try Bloodborne again, you're really missing out!

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] wizard-of-odd 2 punten 5 maanden geleden*

I just picked it up again this past week. I'm in the Forbidden Forest area, and it's pretty cool for what it is. I still have my starting weapon though, which feels weird to me. Summoning doesn't seem to be too popular, but that might be because my level is too high. Blood tinge is really easy to come by so far, and I've mostly just put it into leveling.

I definitely feel you about the hit boxes in DS2 though. Maybe I need to go back and play DS1 again and reevaluate. I hope you're as pumped as I am about DS3. It looks like it's taken some of the good bits from Bloodborne like better animations and hit boxes. I wouldn't mind a weapon or two that transforms.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] SomeGuy928 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

It's pretty typical to have your starting weapon at that stage, I was using my threaded cane - because it's just such a badass weapon - until I got the blades of mercy. Summoning was difficult until I convinced my friend to buy the game as well and we completed the game together. Oh yeah, easy to get, but hard to keep. Just like every souls game haha

I've actually not died much since the first area, so I've been able to hold onto my bloodtinge. I dont think I've not been able to pick up my dropped blood tinge except for a few times.

I personally prefer not to compare them. They're very different games. If Bloodborne was a Souls game I think it would be the worst. But it's not, and it's one of my favorite games. Bloodborne lacked the variety that the Souls series has and the combat was very fast and "light" unlike Souls' slow and weighty combat. I personally don't like to compare Bloodborne to the Souls franchise because it isn't a Souls game and shouldn't be judged as one.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] SomeGuy928 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

I'd have to disagree about them being completely different. There are some big differences (less variety in builds) and small differences (upgrading weapons) between the games, but there are enough similarities for people to make comparisons between the souls games. What do you mean when you describe BB as light and DS as weighty?

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] RombieZombie25 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

Well I didn't really mean that they're completely different. They are very very similar but I think the differences are enough that I prefer not to compare them. I think it's perfectly fine to compare them to one another but I personally don't.

Can you really not see how Bloodborne is more light and fast-paced where as Souls games are slow/weighty and methodical? In Bloodborne basically every combat situation is about being offensive and doing damage. The dodging is very very fast and even the attacks are all very fast. Souls combat is very much about timing, dodging, blocking, and knowing when to attack. The animations are longer and the playstyle is much more on the defensive side of things. In Souls you need to work to avoid damage and attack when you can. In Bloodborne it's more about dealing damage and avoiding it when you can. There's even a feature that lets you regain health by attacking an enemy quickly after getting hit. One of the game's biggest marketing things was how fast paced and offensive it is. What I mean by "light" and "weighted" is basically just speed. Everything in Bloodborne from dodging to healing to attacking is very fast. Souls' is more clunky (although Dark Souls 2 is very smooth compared to previous titles) and slow and combat scenarios are methodical and defensive. I feel like I repeated myself a lot but oh well lol. Hope I answered your question.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] SomeGuy928 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

I definitely understand now and I can see your reasoning behind not comparing them. Sounds like we're both right in what we're saying then haha!

I can see the difference in combat in both games, but I just wanted to make sure I understood what you meant when you said that. Haha, there's nothing wrong with repetition, it gets your points across. I wouldn't necessarily describe DS as slow or defensive - especially in PVP as PVP favours lighter and faster builds. I'd say that the main difference between DS and BB is that DS allows different playstyles which can be fast and light which is what I typically go for (fast roll and high dex weapons), heavy and defensive and anywhere in between. BB streamlined the gameplay and made it fast as well as aggressive, but the light playstyle existed in DS, it's just optimised in BB. I'm not entirely sure where I'm going with this paragraph was I'm 90% I've just agreed with you or repeated your points haha!

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] RombieZombie25 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

I was ignoring PVP when I wrote that comment. Yes PVP favors light weight dex builds but still the game in general is slower and more defensive. The animations alone are much slower than Bloodborne. And Dark Souls is definitely a much more defensive game. Armor and shields are 100x more important than in Bloodborne. I play Dark Souls 2 with light armor and no shield but it's still pretty defensive. If you play Dark Souls like you play Bloodborne you will die. Like I said before even the developers said it's much more agressive and more offensive compared to Dark Souls' defensive playstyle. You can play Souls offensively and aggressively but the game is still built around being precautious, methodical, and defensive.

It's good, but the lore is spread too wide and is too thin, some areas make no logical sense as to how they're connected, and the hitboxes can be terrible. I enjoyed it, but it had more flaws than the first imo.

[–] snoogginswastaken 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

It's not that its a bad game. But, for most myself included. The community followed for hard bosses and PVP. What they got were challenging bosses the first time but, honestly after making a few builds the bosses were quite easy for the ladder and PVP was honestly destroyed because the Soul Memory aspect was introduced which literally made "level capped builds" useless making the meta havel avelyns and then later moved on to whatever was the FOTM (Flavor of the month). I stopped following but, for the die hard PVPers it was kind of a let down because the soul memory ended unique min-max builds and literally made it so a 125 build could fight a max level character. Which was often the case. Hell, even a 100 level gap can matter a good deal. Hope this clarfies the hate. Although, I did enjoy Scholar of the First Sin more since it did make it much harder and added a twist to the game that I enjoyed. Hope this helps ^

Well, what happened was that Jesus went to a temple, and saw that there were money changers(currency conversion stations), as well as several shops that offered animals for sacrifice right inside the temple. So, being pissed off that these people were performing business and performing an act of greed literally right in the temple, he got pissed and started hitting them with a whip he grabbed. Chased all the money changers and shopkeeps out while yelling and flipping all their stands. Definitely an interesting moment for Jesus.

This is based off my memory of when I read the passage a few years back, so that's probably a pretty fuzzy retelling of the actual events.

Okay what the fuck, is there like a version of the Bible that isn't a chore to read? Shit sounds fantastic.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] thebeardlessman 4 punten 5 maanden geleden

Despite what people have said, there actually is a pretty easy to read version of the bible. It's called "The Message" translation, and it's in contemporary English which is great if you don't feel too bothered with some of the more technical aspects; but many Christians don't take it too seriously due to the fact that it's basically paraphrasing scripture.

What needs to be understood though is that the Bible is many different books of different forms. The Old Testament is made up of various books of Law, History, Prophecy and Poetry. If you start reading a book of prophecy with no idea of the context, or a book of history which is halfway through an historical narrative, or a book of law made for people 5000 years ago then you're going to have a bad time. The history books are the easiest to read out of these, but at the same time it's written as history, not as a fictional narrative. Although, it's still pretty entertaining - especially 1 & 2 Samuel which tells the stories of the Judge Samuel, King Saul, and King David. If you have a bit of imagination, it's almost a bronze age palestinian Game of Thrones. There's war, violence, madness, betrayal, sex, adultery and conspiracy. It's a quality read - possibly the highlight of the Old Testament. But, take it for what it is. It's not meant to be an example of flawless people doing the right thing all the time - it's about real, flawed people who struggled with the jealousy, envy and lusts that we face today.

The New Testament is made up of the four gosepls (Matthew, Mark, Luke and John) which tell the story of Jesus' life - that's where you'll find the cool stuff like miracles, profound ethical teachings which are considered 'timeless' (as opposed to contextual ethics about what to wear and what to eat) like "love your enemies", "love your neighbor as yourself", "bless those who curse you". Then you've got great scenes of Jesus telling religious people that the pimps and the prostitutes get into heaven before they do. You see Jesus helping out the lepers and the sick, and damning religious hypocrisy. You see him flip the tables in the temple. Then there's Acts, which is the story of the Saints after Jesus' death and resurrection. Then there's the epistles (letters) of the saints to various churches, mainly St. Paul. These also contain ethical teachings - some contextual and some are timeless.

TL;DR It's a deeply complex work of literature, made up of 66 different books. Try The Message translation if you want easy reading, and if you want the cool stuff check out the books 'Luke', and 'John' for the coolest stuff with Jesus; and '1 Samuel' and '2 Samuel' for a pretty badass history of some of the Israeli Kings.

That sounds awesome! I will definitely look into it. Thank you for the suggestion and detailed reply. :)

[–] EarthExile 0 punten 5 maanden geleden

Nah it's 90% regional conflict and family lines, even the poetry and philosophy is usually work that was relevant to the times. You really have to reach in order to apply any of it to today, or to other things in the narrative. For instance, the line "A maiden will conceive and bear a child" is often used as a "prophecy" that predicted the coming of Jesus, but in-context it was a prophecy that would foretell the Israelites winning a battle- which they lost.

The few times the Bible reads as a storybook, there's some fun stuff in there. But man is it tedious. You have to already be utterly convinced there is meaning in it to find any.

[–] BlowyPoem 0 punten 5 maanden geleden

They would worship NASA and they would consider working for them to be enlightenment, they will always seek additional funding for NASA and it will reach the point crafting NASA's budget becomes a separation of church and state.

That is until a separate group of their follows (or SpaceX) builds better rockets and they will begin to join that other group.

During peacetime, hats have been instrumental for men to let the non-hatted know just who is wearing the hat around here.

Overwatch will be direct competition to TF2. IF they really help those titles with competition you should see improvement soon.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

Will it, really? It seems to be closer to a moba than an arena shooter

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Eplore 4 punten 5 maanden geleden*

Maybe im misinformed but looked to me like a tf2 with some moba skills. It doesn't have the moba map mechanics , one of it's game modes is like the cart delivery another point capture - like t2f.

edit: and in hindsight there is also another argument to make: they have already a moba with hots. No point stealing from themself.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Nathan-Sharp 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

The thing about Overwatch is that it is inherently a different game. It's heavily team-based, and the team dynamics are more like TF2's sixes competetive gamemode; it very heavily relies on cohesive and well-done teams, as well as skill and map knowledge. However, TF2 also has the casual gameplay as well as Highlander, both of which have a much less rigid playstyle demanded of them; pubbing in particular gives a player ridiculous flexibility and often requires the player to be individually skilled, for the team dynamic is hardly existent at all. The TF2 players who love competetive sixes will definitely like Overwatch, but many Highlander players are a fan of the less meta-y team dynamics and us pubbers like the casual style of play. Overwatch won't crush TF2; if anything it'll be a compliment to it, as players can participate in Overwatch and TF2, not having to leave either group. The competetive matchmaking coming up for TF2 will also give Overwatch a run for its money, as it'll introduce a pub-competetive mixture which will have a very very interesting evolution into either a really serious or kinda casual gamemode.

This seems ridiculously ranty and probably isn't coherent, but imma post it anyway. Ah well.

[–] stufstuf 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

I played HL because I really liked the collaboration, team work, map learning. There were so many of you doing a specialised thing, you all had to be working together.

From the new maps of Overwatch it looks exactly like what I wanted TF2 to be. Exactly. I'm so effing hyped. There aren't classes, there are things each hero can do better than others, but even some tanks have group heal abilities, so there isn't the, "Oh my God Pyro you have to airblast or we're dead!" issue. Everyone has a part to play in multiple ways.

It looks super cool.

Back in summer of 2011 when the server first came out(wow, that was four years ago), I played on it for a few months. My faction and I had accumulated many stacks of gold/iron blocks in the non-pvp survival server(basically the only thing you could do back then besides MobArena) from playing MobArena a bunch of times(which had some pretty sweet rewards). We also got really addicted to mining and had tons of diamonds(about 28 blocks total). Also a beacon someone sold us for some iron. They didn't like that(presumably because our work as free-to-players got us more diamonds than many donators), so we got a 24-hour ban for "x-raying" which we were innocent of. We tried to appeal the ban, but they wouldn't hear anything negative about their apparently infallible x-ray detection. When we logged back on, all my stuff was still there, but my cousin was missing a ton of resources. After we complained again, we came back the next day to our faction base completely destroyed. It was clearly done by a high-ranking mod because it was a small faction with all real-life friends, and even if one of my friends had betrayed me, there was no way they could have blown massive holes in my obsidian room. To top it all of, our description was changed to "we are full of retards." Needless to say, we quit the server.

I've found weeb waifu wars have entered into a post ironic phase, whereas western fans aren't used to that sheer level of obsession, so you have more notable instances of utter insanity (like that Sick motherfucker who scientifically figured out what Tali's sweat would taste like).

Asuka vs Rei is in fucking stagnant World War 1 trench warfare at this point, Like Christmas Truce levels of calm. Though I guess that's what happens when the new movies remove all the good character development for action scenes and shipping. The only thing left to fight over is who's character got dumbed down the most.

If I wanted flashy extravagant fight scenes with shallow characters I'd watch something else. Even the part of gainax that isn't popping xanax made better characters than what the rebuilds have established on their own.

Original had both. Shit, 3.0 had an entire movie to flesh out Kaworu's character, and the original did just as much in 10 minutes of screen time as that whole very pretty trainwreck.

Of course they're all terrible people and waifus, but they Wait why? As a person who was pretty big in the Kaidan club before the forums were shut down, we ALL loved Ashley. Worst part of the game, that decision.

But yeah you Liara people already know your choice is the superior one (according to the overlord Devs)

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] BobsterExpress 4 punten 5 maanden geleden

If you actually took the time to talk to her you'd know she wasn't xenophobic. She was skeptical of aliens. Her becoming friends with Tali later on in the series also disproves her being xenophobic. Also her reaction to Terra Firma shows she isn't xenophobic. On Virmire she is also more than willing to work with Captain Kirrahe.

[–] krabbby 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

She specifically said she didn't like Terra Firma because they saw humans as better, and hated Cerberus because they were pro-human at the expense of other races. All she said was that if it came down to it, every race would abandon them to worry about themselves, and you know what? She was fucking right because the Council abandoned earth to save themselves. That Asari Councillor even said that they were sacrificing earth to buy them time to reinforce their defenses. She knew. She fucking knew.

Sure we eventually found friends in the other races, but only because of how exceptional Shepard was. He was a wildcard no one expected, even Ashley. You show me one time she was racist.

[–] ArcaneInsane 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

That's a valid point, but it's the same problem that came up in Dragon Age 2. A highly interactive story about powerlessness tends to make the player feel powerless, which isn't fun. As a piece of art I love the Mass Effect series, and they are some of my favorite games to date, but I still didn't enjoy the ending. It doesn't help that it kind of blew up the setting.

The Ten Commandments of maining our lord and savior, Captain Falcon

1. Thou shalt not attack thy opponent without asking them to show you their moves, or to COME ON!
2. Thou shalt not attack a taunt spammer, for they are the chosen people of the Captain, and are afforded his sacred protection. Do not harm them, lest you anger Captain Falcon.
3. Thou shalt not bemoan the Captain's tier standing, and blame him for a loss. It was not Captain Falcon who was too weak, it was thou.
4. Thou shalt always spam "SHOW ME YA MOVES" whenever the crowd chants for the Captain, as a sign of acknowledgement to all of his loyal fans. Thou shalt also spam this taunt if the camera is zoomed in on the Captain from a Tingle Assist Trophy.
5. Thou shalt let any Kirby who wishes to inhale and copy the Falcon Punch do as he pleases. However, if thou is attacked by this Kirby, Captain Falcon's swift judgment must be delivered to him, as he has broken the sacred bond of Master and Pupil, and shall pay for his foolishness.
6. Thou shalt not land a Falcon Punch or Knee of Justice without immediately asking thy opponent to show you their moves, unless thou has a chance to perform a Sacred Combo, in which case the taunt must be performed as soon as thou hast finished.
7. Thou shalt respect thy father, Ganondorf, as thou would respect a fellow Captain Falcon. Ganondorf is law.
8. Thou shalt not allow a spammer to not show the Captain their moves if he has asked them to. If the spammer insists on using the same move, thy fury must be delivered swiftly and with good aim to the spammer until they agree to show the Captain the rest of their moves, or are killed.

9. Thou shalt use the Falcon system of measurement.
10. Thou shalt lead children along the path of the Falcon by showing them thy moves as capably as thou can, and leading them to believe that using Captain Falcon is the way to victory.

"WOMBO COMBO" is a video of an old Melee doubles set featuring what remains today the hypest team combo ever performed.

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=pD_imYhNoQ4

The "Sacred Combo" is a combo exclusive to Captain Falcon, which consists of a forward aerial (Falcon's knee) and then an off-stage Falcon Punch. It's famous because it incorporates the two moves that Captain Falcon is best known for and is extremely hype because of how rarely it happens, what with Falcon Punch being one of the slowest and un-viable moves to use in competitive Melee.

I don't understand that cult. Like, I grew up with Smash, but they created their own version of terminology that I never hear anywhere but in Smash forums. Like wtf is a NAIR? That's a skin product that removes hair, but it's also a smash term for something that has to do with an air move. I only know that much because I watched a top post in /r/smashbros where someone said it about 30 times in 10 seconds to describe what someone was doing with an air combo. I still don't know what it exactly means.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Huff_Paint 6 punten 5 maanden geleden

Nair is a Neutral-AIR attack. Attacking in the air with your control stick in neutral position, ie just tapping attack in the air without flicking a direction. Pointing your stick in one of the four directions for a Back-air, down-air, up-air and forward-air are similarly shortened to bair, dair uair and fair. It just saves time when you're talking about a string of moves or commentating.

They're their own game at this point. It's not intended to recreate Melee it's intended to recreate Melee's competitive spirit. If it was truly dedicated to recreating the past then Fox would not have received nerfs and the 8 viable mains of Melee would also only be viable in PM.

Competitive Smash players consider Brawl to be more casual than the other games because the physics in that game are more floaty, there aren't as many advanced techniques available and characters sometimes randomly trip (this one is disliked by everyone, casual and competitive players). Melee is considered the best one by them because it's faster and there are things like wavedashing and other techniques that are hard to do. All of them are easy to pick up and play with friends, but some are more "competitive friendly" than others. Personally, I prefer the one for Wii U, but everyone has their favorite.

*Edit: Added tripping thanks to Adm1ra1Blackjack

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] protoasha 11 punten 5 maanden geleden

The tripping is right, but competitive Brawl actually has more advanced techniques than Smash 4 does. I know for example one of them is DACUS, which got taken out in Smash 4.

I feel like one of the few people who loved Brawl more than Melee simply because of the wifi online stuff. Not being able to go to events and stuff got me pretty bored with melee, but with brawl I was able to play it pretty much every night with random people around the world while still finding quite a few other competitive players online. I went along with the taunt parties sometimes, but other times it was fun to try to disrupt them because they usually had a pretty good player in them "protecting" the others, from what I've seen in my experiences from like 2010 lol.

Here's an analogy for our Smash Games (not my own but it works)

Melee is a high end finely aged wine that has an extremely complex flavor, but it's expensive and not many people want to go through the trouble to obtain it. An amazing game, but many people don't want to invest time in getting a gamecube, some decent controllers, and scavenging local garage sales for a CRT.

Brawl was a wine with a terrible bitterness up front, but a complex and interesting aftertaste. There was a lot of dumb shit in Brawl that was to help bring down the skill ceiling, but at the same time a lot of new techniques were found that weren't available in previous games.

Smash 4 is a mild wine with a mild aftertaste. Many people prefer it because it lacks the bitterness up front, but many people find it to be bland and boring.

Project M, a mod for Brawl that tries to make it play and feel like Melee, is best described as a cheap and almost as good knockoff as the finely aged wine, but stores won't carry it in order to prevent being sued for copyright infringement.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] drake210 6 punten 5 maanden geleden

The project m analogy makes me sad. It's more like melee was a red wine, and people liked it, but then nintendo decided they didn't like red wine, so they started making only white wine. Some independent hobbyist decided to make their own red, but nintendo tried to bury it so people wouldn't stop buying their whites, and people think its a worse version of melee, because it's the second red wine, when it's just in the same category.

I personally love PM, it's my absolute favorite smash installment. PMDT are amazing people and the fact that they do this for the love of the game is incredible. I really wish Nintendo didn't get all weird on them about it. Miss the big streams.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] rileyrulesu 131 punten 5 maanden geleden

Man, I legitimately think brawl is better than smash 4. Sure smash 4 has more characters, but that ain't shit compared to SSE. Brawl knew it was for casuals, but smash 4 likes to pretend it's a hardcore fighting game, and its single player really suffers because of it.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

Sakurai's reasoning for not including something similar to sse is much worse, he didn't like that the videos of the cutscenes in sse were spoiled on the Internet

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] NinjaCoachZ 30 punten 5 maanden geleden

I think the reasoning was more "we put a shitload of money into these CGs and people didn't even buy the game to watch them, so we're going to spend our money on other stuff instead"

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Dukajarim 13 punten 5 maanden geleden

The reasoning is absolutely baffling no matter which way you spin it. It would similar to a studio no longer producing movies because a cool scene ended up on YouTube.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] needconfirmation 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

Yeah only they spent all that money on character trailers instead.

You know, that thing that everyone just watches on the internet without having to buy the game, which is exactly why he was mad about the SSS cutscenes

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] NinjaCoachZ 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

Yeah, that's the idea. The character trailers are marketing for the game, the Subspace cutscenes are part of the game. You're probably more likely to buy a game after seeing a cool trailer for it rather than its cutscenes.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] megatom0 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

But.... the game sold very well. In fact it is the best selling SSB game of the entire series. I hope they realize how much the series needs a decent proper SP mode, because honestly I'm not gonna buy the next if it has a SP mode that is just a grindy fuck fest.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] jaydoubleyoutee 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

That's because the Wii dominated the N64, the Gamecube, and especially the Wii U in sales. Brawl sold decently for a Wii game, but Melee is the top-selling Gamecube game and Sm4sh is creeping to the top 3 for Wii U.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

I just get slightly annoyed when people get mad a Sakurai for wanting things to be a surprise. Sorry I know it's not related to your comment

This was really crazy to me. Its like he hadn't see that this happens to literally every game made nowadays. Like SSBB should be this grand exclusion or something. Honestly to me this was a bullshit excuse.

I feel like the game was kind of half-baked without it. The Singleplayer mode as is is the worst fucking SP mode in the history of any fighting game. It is purely grinding. It isn't just "beat the game with every character" it is "beat the game with every character 1000000000x times" and the whole unlock system is just a fucking insult.

It just seemed like Nintendo was trying to cash in on SSB as quickly as possible, the game needed the SP mode to really be worth $60.

Smash really isn't targeted at the competitive scene.

It's a fortuitous side market- that's all. Smash Bros has always been targeted at people who just want to have fun- it's very pick-up-and-play.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Garlien 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

And yet competitive play has much more depth and play time than casual play. Smash 4 has features that are directly aimed for the competitive players. There are several ways to play the game, and the competitive method isn't very "pick up and play".

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Mcflexington 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

But in context, it stands alongside Melee - THE most technically demanding fighting game. Competitive 64 is incredibly obtuse as well. So, for a smash game, it's leaning more towards the "pick up and play" side.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Garlien 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

Sm4sh is easily more technically demanding than 64.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Mcflexington 0 punten 5 maanden geleden

We're not talking about a competitive fighting game. We're talking about Brawl. It was designed in an explicitly anti-competitive way. The best part of Brawl was SSE, which only came to be because of Sakurai wanting the game to be casual. When Nintendo says they're going to make a competitive game but only pulls a half measure, nobody wins.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Garlien 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

Brawl is the best smash bros game for casuals, sm4sh would have to top Melee for your comment to be incorrect. I can't say I disagree, at least relative to the rest of the series.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Mcflexington 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Mcflexington 4 punten 5 maanden geleden

I'm 60% sure 4 was only at Evo because Nintendo wouldn't have let Melee be there otherwise.

Not to mention, smash players are gonna play a lot of the new game, every time. There were a few years where Brawl was the game to be playing, and I don't know any reason that could be other than it's the newest game in the series. Nothing else about it appeals to the competitive scene.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Crazc 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

Brawl is different than Sm4sh. Sm4sh is actually enjoyable to watch and play competitively.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Krail 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

Do you really think that's the reason? I mean, this time around they just poured tons of money into cutscenes that were meant to be shared around Youtube and such.

SSE just took a ton of time and energy that they would have rather spent making more characters and working on the overall game.

(I did love SSE and I'm sad there's not a decent replacement. I do enjoy Smash Run, though. I wish there were more to it)

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Crazc 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

SSE was a good story and fun boss fights, but every part in between was ass. And it was improbable that it was every going to be in Smash 4 because of the disc space needed. It was easy enough to do in SD, but once it's in HD, it's that much harder and unnecessary.

But I agree, Smash 4 doesn't have a really enjoyable single-player-mode, but who really only buys Smash games for the single player modes?

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] jfletch99 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

Definitely. The SP for Sm4sh is a fucking grindy mess. I mean it is literally 90% grinding. Literally the worst singleplayer in any Because people in the different games like to say that they're better than others. Obviously when someone from Brawl or Smash 4 says they're super good but then don't know basic things required for smash- like short-hopping people get angry.

Also Melee master-race.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] imbatmawn 2 punten 5 maanden geleden*

I never said it wasn't. I said people in those games (more smash4 since its the most recent) tend to feel that they're better than they really are- and that they think they're ready to go pro when they don't really even understand basic tech skill.

Just because you keep downvoting me, doesn't make it untrue. Get off for glory and start learning.

Do you people not know that you can block games and apps from sending you requests?!

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] 101110001 5 punten 5 maanden geleden

I know I can block the game and app, however the people who continue to send them after I have asked them to stop are likely to do so again with just another game/app. And honestly, if they are that annoying digitally, they probably aren't the most tolerable people in person.

YMMV, but not the kind of people I bother getting to know much better.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] woundedstork 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

Uhh ok. I mean, its your life, but I probably hit block app about 20 times in the last 5 years. Took about 2 seconds each time. Doesn't make sense to just delete people or think they are annoying people if they play those games.

They aren't just sending your requests to be annoying the game rewards them and sometimes doesn't even let them know it's sending out requests. You are awful judgemental!

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] 101110001 -3 punten 5 maanden geleden

Me asking them to stop should let them know it's sending out requests. And while they may not be sending it to be annoying, it is. Regardless of intent, if something is annoying, it is. If you are really a friend, you should take that into consideration.

The game doesn't reward them if the person you are sending the request to does not play so again, me telling them I do not want the request conveys they will not get the reward and no longer have a reason to send the request.

Judgmental? Meh, maybe. But you are judging me so "let he who is without sin" and all that.

No joke, I had a random girl approach me only to ask if I played Candy Crush. It was completely out of left field. It went a bit like:

"Hey, do you play Candy Crush?" :D :D

-She cheerfully inquired in an inquiry.

"uhh...
   nope."

My outside demeanor is welcoming and open, but inside I am completely bewildered.

"Well then... you should! ^_^"

-She chipperly quipped.

Please note how the ASCII face is inside of the doublequotes. That wasn't her expression; That exact ASCII face was explicitly conveyed through speech.

-I'm torn. I want this conversion to end, but I also REALLY want it to continue just because my brain can't possibly imagine where it could possibly go next.

She then skips off, conversion apparently successful.

Arceus is the High God, with Palkia, Dialga, and Giratina ruling below him. Rayquaza would be more like a demigod

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] AsianMidgett 28 punten 5 maanden geleden

I imagine there would be different sub religions, like one that worships the creation trio. Or one that worships that worships the weather trio. There would be the satanists that love Giratina, and Reddit's favorite, the atheists that believe Mew was the first Pokemon.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] AvatarWaang 20 punten 5 maanden geleden

I'm thinking it would be set up as a polytheistic faith much like Greek mythology; Zues, Poseidon, and Hades replaced by Palkia, Dialga, and Giratina (it gets a bit different after that because the titan Cronos equivalent is Arceus who, in this version, was never destroyed but rules over the ones he created). Most of the other legendaries would be gods under those, including the weather trio, the crystals, etc. It crosses over to Christianity a bit with Mew, the Messiah and son of Arceus, who's purity was perverted by man to create the false god Mewtwo. Ash would represent a figure like Moses who seeks to free Pokémon from the Egyptian-like Team Rocket and all the other similar groups.

That's actually a cool description for that. I need to get my emulator again and play the new games. I'm stuck in my bias that everything after R/S/E are garbage. Like really... An ice cream cone and a Celtic sword pokemon? A little Farfetch'd if you ask me.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] fly19 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

Yeah, for every Vanillish, there's a Braviary.

People don't give Nintendo a lot of credit for the new Pokemon. Granted, they definitely don't need to make 70-100 new ones every time they make a new game, but they done pretty well all things considered.

I just wish the games went more in the direction of a significant and interesting plot like Black and White did.

Well Mew is more like Adam and Eve. Jesus is Arceus

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] Neospector 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

Arceus is more like god, since it was alive at the beginning and created the universe. Maybe Jirachi is Jesus, if anything? It's definitely a lot more like what AvatarWaang said, polytheistic faith like Greek mythology.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] AsianMidgett 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

It's more of a polytheistic faith with aspects from all the major religions instead of limiting it to the Greek gods. In Christianity Jesus and God are both the same person and separate beings, so Arceus could be Jesus and God.

Related lore: The Divines actually are the planets -- mortal eyes cannot comprehend their true form, so they see them as their apparent spherical shapes in the heavens. The moons, Masser and Secunda, are the broken corpse of Lorkhan, the Missing God, the 'one' in the Eight and One of the old pantheon. He was killed by the other divines in the Mythic Era for his trickery in convincing them to sacrifice some of their power to create Nirn.

Talos becomes a god by mantling Lorkhan, taking over his role, and thereby fulfilling his rightful place in the pantheon.

the closest thing to rocket league i've seen IRL was when it was the middle of winter, the snowbanks on either side of the road where high enough to essentially be natural fences, and down at the farm they decided that instead of bothering to put the cows in a trailer to drive them up to the next barn they'd just herd them out into the road, then keep them going up it with bumper nudges from the pickup. If one was getting haywire and panicking and about to try and charge off through the snowbank, cut them off so they thunk off the side of the truck and keep heading up the road.

it was basically the same, cows are about as smart as inflated balls, just a little less predictable.

[–] The13thzodiac 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

(Tactics is best Final Fantasy!)

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] PhilosophicalToilet 3 punten 5 maanden geleden

I agree wholeheartedly that it's the best Final Fantasy game. But VII is the best traditional (non-tactics) RPG of the final fantasy series IMO.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] The13thzodiac 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

VII was my first game and not just first FF, but I like VI more, only due to Kefka. (I really do like JENOVA as the main 'hidden' (even though she is no way hidden and literally is creating Sephiroth) villain though.)

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] PhilosophicalToilet 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

It's weird because I'm old enough to remember playing III and so on on the SNES. But for some reason when VII came out a bunch of kids in my class were playing it so we'd all meet up and talk about the game and where we were at in the game. I'll admit I'm fueled by nostalgia when it comes to VII I just think it was a huge step for Final fantasy considering all the previous ones were 2D.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] The13thzodiac 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

It is a huge step in that aspect, but it's graphics haven't aged well unlike VI's. Also, 3-D was really only used to make it prettier, other than it's use in the minigames (which is an entirely justifiable reason to like VII the most of any FF game due to Chocobo Racing).

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] PhilosophicalToilet 1 punt 5 maanden geleden

These are fair criticisms I can't argue against since my appreciation is dated in my memory. But underneath it all I think we can both agree starting a new game of tactics and wondering what sort of class combinations will be the most satisfying is better than all other FF games.

permalink oorspronkelijke post

[–] PhilosophicalToilet 2 punten 5 maanden geleden

I've had this recommended to me once before. Does it have a similar class system as FFT? Because that is what has brought me back again and again to tactics because each time I do a full playthrough I can have a different technique.

Just a bunch of crazed individuals hiding in the shadows and analyzing every piece of information they can find, desperately trying to figure out the story of their holy games. They shout and hiss at anyone who approaches them, usually pushing the intruders away but sometimes working with others.

Their obsession leads to lack of sleep. Their lack of sleep leads to nightmares. Their nightmares consist of Lord Endo and his "toys," which leads them to believe that they are displeasing their gods.

Only the Chosen One, Scott Cawthorn, knows the tales of the gods. And he will tell the story as he sees fit.

It's fun how there's a huge disparity between so many of the heroes in terms of how powerful you'd expect them to be versus how they're balanced in the game. You have entities that are basically gods of varying strength- Zeus, Elder Titan, Bane, Enigma, Ancient Apparition, Weaver, etc. Then you've got some inexplicable Eldritch type guys like Outworld Devourer, Spectre, Faceless Void, etc. And then there's a midget with a gun. HOO HOO, HA HA.

- This is further proof of the War on Kojimanity, which of course, has changed...
- It's "Adamska and Eva," not "Pachinko fucking machines"!!!!!!!
- Our father (Big Boss), who art in Outer Heaven...

Best parallels I can draw:

Christianity: Half Life. Constantly waiting for the Messiah, the son of Gaben, HL3. The trinity of the father (Gaben), the son (Half Life), and the Holy spirit (Steam). There are many who believe Gaben literally created the PC in 7 days, but they are a fringe group. Most believe this was a metaphor, as it is stated in Source chapter 4, verse 20: "Lo I created the game, the platform, and the community. In the time of Valve a thousand years is but a day, and a day a thousand years.

Islam: World of Warcraft. Mostly a religion of peace, and one of the most popular in the world, however there are some radical sects that make the entire faith look terrible. From the cave dwelling Internet terrorists known as M'Quaeda, to the radicals in China exploiting the community for personal gain. Due to the terrorist attacks on the twin expansions, it's quickly losing membership and public opinion is at an all time low.

Buddhism: Mario. A very old religion, but one of absolute peace. Followers of the Mario are only interested in finding the Nirvana of the perfectly crafted level. While they have no central deity, their founder Shiguru, is sometimes worshipped as such by less traditional followers. This religion has no interest in expanding its membership, but welcome new believers with open arms.

Scientology: League of Legends. A new, quickly expanding religion. Generally hated by the rest of the world. Most followers are obtained through falsehoods and coercion, with false promises that they could achieve "challenger" if they devote enough time and money to the faith. However, it usually drains its members of their money and resources with no tangible gain. One of their more insane beliefs is that their God Rito will bless the faithful with sandboxes and balanced gameplay.

I was referring to the fact that almost every traffic report during any day includes at least one accident. Hell, about 2 weeks ago I watched a sedan and a 53' semi try to occupy the same lane... The semi tried to sneak in at a turn before the sedan got the green arrow. The sedan was on the median, and fucked up, the semi was in the second lane (second lane is only about 100 yards.). I was right behind the sedan, had to navigate between them, and the debris.

Minecraft. Suddenly strange homes made of dirt start springing up in random neighborhoods, eventually being replaced old time wood cabins, and after that, castles. These structures are always built by hand, as members of the faith see modern machinery as hacks and will kill any user of said hacks to ban them from the server of life. The places of worships are led by a hierarchy of Owners, Admins, Ops, and Mods, all of whom take themselves too seriously. Eventually the world is consumed by this cult and the entire world will wait en masse for the coming of the next patch.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bureaucracy_(video_game)

>
> The player is challenged to confront a long and complicated series of bureaucratic hurdles resulting from a recent change of address. Mail isn't being delivered, bank accounts are inaccessible, and nothing is as it should be. The game includes a measure of simulated blood pressure which rises when "frustrating" events happen and lowers after a period of no annoying events. Once a certain blood pressure level is reached, the player suffers an aneurysm and the game ends.

> According to Adams, the premise of the game was inspired by a real-life experience. Before moving from one address to another in London, Adams filled out several change-of-address forms, including one he submitted in person at his bank. Shortly after settling into his new home, he found that his credit card no longer worked. The bank had invalidated his current card and sent a new one to his old address. Adams spent weeks trying to get the bank to correct its mistake, filling out several new forms and talking to several bank officials. The bank finally sent a letter apologising for the inconvenience; naturally, it was sent to his old address.

Many have come to loathe their way of life and wish to stop, but can't for fear of wasting so much time of their life for nothing and must see it through. Those who actually manage to quit end up coming back later, only wasting even more time.

Reminds me a lot of the real world.

Civilization, they seem like pretty normal, level headed people, until you realize one church service can last for days, sometimes weeks.

"Lord, on this day we ask of you a start with salt, so that our hammers may increase, and our people grow more plentiful. Give us this day access to fresh water, so the tradesmen may flourish and give onto us great gifts. Let our city rest below a mountain, so we may better see the stars and be therefore enlightened. Let our city rest upon the shore so that we may trade and be traded with. And lord, we ask of you protection, O great lord, protect us from the wrath of Gandhi, lead us into his peace, lest the fires of nuclear war drown us in blood and fire. This we ask of you O lord, so that we may take but one more turn this day, and everyday. Amen"

We shall now sing from the Hymnal, "the sandy hills of Petra"

Things get pretty strange on the No Man's Sky subreddit, but I think the craziest would be Hatred. This game is somewhat like Postal. This guys hates the world and just wants everyone to die and he wants to die in the most brutal way he can. You go around neighborhoods and shoot up house parties, police stations, grocery stores, etc. In order to regenerate your health you have to perform executions on people and they are pretty crazy. So if there was a cult following this the people would just be going around slaughtering neighborhoods, driving cars through houses, and trying to kill the whole world.

Anyway, it is a fun game and was pretty wild to play. I was on my third day with speed the first time I played it and when I shot up the first bus stop area I could just see dead people and blood all over and the faint cries for help of those who were injured and the sound of sirens in the background as the cops came to investigate. I just stopped for a minute there and took it in cause I was kind of surprised at how "realistic" it was, I was surprised but had a blast.

How is Dead Space not on this list? There is literally a crazy suicide cult that is the main plot of the games. I would imagine any real world equivalent would be pretty intense.

I was gonna say The Binding of Isaac series, and it already has such a religious aspect of the game (the characters are based off of Biblical characters, some items are religious based, Devil/Angel deals, the final boss is fucking Mega Satan, which if that isn't an iconic boss name, I don't know what is). I'm excited for Afterbirth, mainly because of the new items, and honestly, I hope they make references to cults and historical figures to make it more...interesting.

So surprised I have not seen Fable yet. So many people would just go on random murder sprees, have hundreds of children, marry prostitutes, sacrifice their now wife/prostitute, eat baby chicks, tax the heck out of their kingdom, (insert fun/evil Fable stuff)

Who the heck plays Fable as a good guy?? (if you do, mad props. You are a gem.)

With a story line dealing with almost every fear of future technology, multiple wars being blamed for them, a super secret society dictating the world & the craziest abuse/tortured/manipulated enemies in a game. If that doesn't sound like the set up for the craziest cult, look a little further at MGS & see men wearing thongs, unnecessary eye patches, becoming cyborgs, hiding in cardboard boxes, spinning until they throw up, phone calls you must answer no matter what is going on & having others shout your name when you die.

The games that I felt had the most cult-like fan-base were the Kingdom Hearts games. I've seen fans obsess over tiny, insignificant details in the storyline and read so much into the meaning and the layers. Fallout. While not the craziest, is definitely one of the most dangerous. The cult of Fallout worships Atom, or the idea of nuclear destruction across the earth. Leaving only the worthy bask in the warm glow of radiation. Members of the cult are regularly exposed to small doses of radiation that the call, "Atom's Light". Not only this, but they have a four phase plan to achieve their dream.

Phase 1: After indoctrination, cult members are assigned to bunkers, or "vaults" to live in, and to preserve humanity for Phase 4.

Phase 2: Insurgents are sent into the worlds various militaries as scientists and high ranking officials. When insurgence is complete, obtaining nuclear codes and nuclear based weapons would be the main priority. Once completed, phase 3 begins.

Phase 3:Global nuclear armageddon. With all or the majority of nuclear weapons in the hands of the newly dubbed "Vault Dwellers", the insurgents activate the codes and rain atomic fire onto every country. Wiping humanity of the face of the earth. By the time the world powers realize what has happened, it will be too late.

Phase 4: The "Vault Dwellers" emerge approximately 200 years later from the vaults to inhabit the wasteland that was earth once more. Now that it has been cleansed with the power of Atom.

Unfortunately, many "vaults" and communities will be destroyed due to infighting amongst the various factions of the cult, all seeking control to the fate of the now, "Wastelanders". This will eventually lead to the destruction of them all, as the factions are driven to full scale war, leaving an unsustainable population to continue humanity as it slowly dwindles out, only leaving the bones of the dead and the destroyed cities as their epitaph. Because as we all know... war, war never changes.

permalink parent

[–] DPleskin 1 point 5 months ago

tali is beautiful. me and my org oartner have a connie andromeda, retaliator, sh, hull c, starfarer gemini and were going to buy orion, banu and a vanguard during next sales. we want to start a deep space mining and hauling org using the banu, hulls and starfere for convoy with connie and SH/Vanguard support hauling from the orion set up as far out as we can.

permalink parent

[–] ItsComrade 1 point 5 months ago

Jesus christ. I'm the proud owner of an SH only. Planning on melting it and buying a vanguard if i can afford it when the sale rolls around. You guys have it together. Keep it up.

permalink parent

[–] DPleskin 1 point 5 months ago

im really torn over thr vanguard. Depending on how well the SH does on long run deep space trips with starfarer fueling it might be more bang for the bucks then a vanguard. without the starfarer though vanguard is a sweet sweet option for long run escort and attack missions. Part of the reason we want such deep space mining is to stay out of range of strikes from SH, Gladius, etc. Vanguards scare me.

permalink parent

[–] ItsComrade 1 point 5 months ago

I want to play sorta solo, so I think the Vanguard would be good. It could easily be operated by one pilot with an AI gunner.

permalink parent

[–] DPleskin 1 point 5 months ago

I believe you should be able to operate it fully solo, the guns will just be more effective with a dedicated gunner. I'm not 100% sure it's been a while since I did proper reading

permalink parent

[–] DPleskin 1 point 5 months ago

basically we want one of us running the orion and the other heading the convoy from the banu with trusted friends in the connie and employees manning the hulls, mining and smaller escorts.
